

THE INDEPENDENT

Three days to save the world: global warming summit on brink of failure

Pollution turns the sky red over Mount Fuji, which overlooks Kyoto, scene of the world summit on pollution

The first signs of a fudged agreement in Kyoto were emerging last night - a deal which will do next to nothing to stop potentially disastrous climate cinange. Nicholas Schoon, Favironment Correspondent, writes from Kyoto that with only three days to go, more than 150 countries are still deeply divided over a new UN global warming treaty.

The European Union's tough world-leading stance on tackling global warming has begun to crumble. It became clear last night that the EU would not win its key demand that developed countries should cut their greenhouse gas emissions by 15 per cent by 2010.

The final agreed target for cuts in these, the most important environmental talks ever, will be somewhere between 0 and 10 per cent, according to Britain's deputy prime minister John Prescott, who said last night that it was clear any agreement achieved by the end of the talks would be lacking ure," said Mr Prescott. crucial details. Despite having had two and a half years to draw up the treaty, and seven days of intense bargaining in Kyoto, the negotiators representing 150 countries have yet to reach agreement on about 10 issues and hundreds of lines of text.

The divisions between the EU and the rest of the wealthy nations over how much needs to be done remain deep. So does that between this US dominated rich club and the developing world. But now ministers have arrived in Japan's former capital to start talking face to face, the pace has moved up several gears. This will meet Vice-President Al Gore to usk America to give ground for the sake of the planet. "There's an overwhelming feeling that people do want to get an agreement - no one wants to be hlamed for fail-

If however the rich nations do agree to cut their annual emissions by only a few per cent compared to a 1990 baseline, that will be no great success in a world with an already warming atmosphere and oceans. It would signal to the Third World that those nations who produce most of the pollution do not take the problem too scriously. And, since global warming pollution from the poor countries is rising rapidly as they industrialise, it would not even stop world-wide emissions increasing with each passing year. That, in turn, means the concentrations of greenhouse gasmoning in Kyoto Mr Prescott es in the etmosphere will. continue to rise more and more rapidly, threatening catastrophic climate change and sea level risc through the next century and beyond.

Britain argues that the time has come to drop the two most extreme positions in these negotiations - the European Union wanting a 15 per cent cut and Australia demanding an 18

As for the complex six issues which have absorbed days of talking in Kyoto, "there's not enough time to come to an agreement", said Mr Prescott. These include greenbouse gas "sinks" which absorb some of the pollution, like forestry plantations, "joint implementation" which means rich countries offsetting some of their cuts at home by helping poor countries reduce pollution, and the trading between wealthy nations in allowances to produce greenhouse gases. Much of the basics, let alone the detail, would have to be sorted out over the next two to three years.

A group of wealthy nations, led by the US, will have to soften their line on the Third World if there is to be any hope of an agreement by the time the conference ends, probably in the small hours of Thursday.

America has been demanding that the deal involves some developing countries, particularly India and China, making some kind of "meaningful" commitment about their own rising emissions. But that is outside the original mandate for the treaty.

Last night in Kyoto the EU's Environment Commissioner Ritt Bjerregaard said the EU rejected a new proposal of different targets for different nations based largely on how much each was willing to offer in the run-up to Kyoto. The suggestion is that Europe would cat by 10 per cent, the US by 5, Japan by 2.5 and Australia increase by 5. She said none of the EU ministers now in Kyoto "wish to water down the EU proposal ... the feeling is that the US can do much more." Hopes are pinned on Vice-President Gore.

But the EU will come down from 15 per cent, and there are signs of flexibility in its demand that all developed countries must sign up for the same cut. Already it is willing to allow Australia and some other countries an easier target. Behind the scenes talks have begun on a formula or set of rules which would in effect allow nations different targets over the 20year period from 1990 to 2010.

Kyoto summit, page 10 Letters, page 12

This unit will embody a core new

Labour value: "community" or "one nation". It is a belief that we achieve more together than we can alone. That each person no matter what their background opportunity and responsibility going together. Already the new Labour government has put in place the most radical policies for a generation to tackle pover-tified. The higgest-ever programme to get the young and long-term unemployed back to work; £300m going into the first-ever national child-care strategy, VAT on heating cut and £50 to help all pensioners on income support with their winter fuel bitls, housing benefit and section 11 funding cuts reversed, capital receipts released to build homes for the homeless, £4bn into health and education with money targeted at the poorest areas; 6 million given the chance to save for the first time, and soon

Britain's first-ever statutory minimum

Politics, page 8

That is a big claim but I believe it is jus-

Our contract with the people was about should bave the chance to succeed.

ty and social exclusion.

mediate problems.

INSIDE TODAY

Nightmare at the opera: Deborah Ross interviews Lord Chadlington I5/FEATURES

Jenny Agutter: Everyone's Darling

THE EYE

Happy hookers go to war on academics 3/NEWS

The Turin Shroud: genuine after all?

20/DISCOVERIES

TILEVISION The Eye, page 12 CROSSWORDS Page 20 and

WEATHER The Eye, page 10 Web address: http://www.

This year, give them

one present they'll never lose interest in.

An Abbey National Children's Savings Bond. Invest as little as £500 for them now, and they're guaranteed a generous, fixed return in five years' time. All the interest is reinvested, which means that as they grow, so does their Bond.

To apply, or for information, simply call Abbey National, quoting reference A623, or come

Saving and Investing

0800 100 801

ABBEY NATIONAL Because life's complicated enough.

lines are open Monday to Friday 9am to 5pm and Saturday 9am to 1pm. o assist os in improving our service, we may record or monitor releptione calls. Only available to persons under 17 years of age. Provided the beneficiary is under 17 years of age, the Bond may be opened in the name of the flustees. The Bond is a limited offer and subject to availability. Abbey National and the Umbiella.Coople symbol are trademarks of Abbey National plc, Abbey House, Baket Street, Condon NW1 6XL.

TODAY'S NEWS

£1m bill for refurbishing homes of two royal staff

Two royal employees spent more than £1m of taxpayers' money on refurbishing their homes, according to a report by a powerful committee of MPs. The revelation has helped to prompt the Public Accounts Committee to call for curbs on public subsidies for accommodation at the royal palaces. Page 3

Deadly flu warning

A potentially-deadly strain of flu which scientists believed affected only poultry has claimed its second human victim in Hong Kong. International researchers are scrambling to identify the characteristics of the virus amid increasing fears of a pandemic. Page 3

Babies hit by HIV

Britain is facing a new Aids epidemic - In children. A growing number of babies are being infected with the virus hecause their mothers have never had an HIV test. Pregnant women who are infected with the virus are being kept in the dark because there is no routine HIV testing in antenatal clinics. More than 250 HIV positive women gave birth in 1996 - the highest numher ever recorded. Page 5

Billy Bremner dies

Billy Bremner, the former Leeds and Scotland soccer star, has died of a suspected heart attack at the age of 54, his family said yesterday. The midfielder made 585 appearances for Leeds between 1959 and 1976 before moving into management. Page 16 and Sport

Blair: Why we must help those excluded from society

The Prime Minister writes exclusively for The Independent on the Social Exclusion Unit which is launched today.

New Labour was created so that we became the party of all the people: so that we could win power with the purpose of rebuilding Britain as one nation and giving everyone a stake in society. Yes, we are the party of Middle Britain, but if we don't raise the standard of living of the poorest people in Britain we will have failed as a government.

The Social Exclusion Unit, which I am launching today, will be at the heart of govcriment, with the remit of co-ordinating our assault on poverty and social exclusion. Social Exclusion is about more than just financial deprivation. It is about the damage done by poor housing, ill-health, poor education, lack of decent transport, but above all the lack of work.

It is the better-off who often say the way to deal with poverty is to hand out more in benefits. Those on benefits do nnt ask for sympathy; nor do they want to be trapped on benefits which, even if increased, are never going in give them real security. They want apportunities and the chance to carn a decent living. Our policy will be not be just to shell out money when things go wrong but to invest now to prevent poverty and social exclusion happening. It will ensure that problems are solved across departments and in ways that make life easier for recipients. For the key point about the unit is the recognition that all of these problems are linked. Poor education means a poor job. A poor job often leads to poor housing. Poor housing and poor jobs make it harder to bring up a family. So members of the unit will be drawn widely - from husiness, police and the, voluntary sector with a range of experience of dealing with poverty, truancy, homelessness.

'Is it just another talking shop, more policy wonkery? Just another fizzing intitiative that fizzles out before long? Yet another layer of bureaucracy? Polly Toynbee, page 13

This is a programme that tackles headon the causes of poverty and exclusion. So the idea that this government is the same as the last one, is nonsense. But we must do more. I have asked them to focus on three big problems as a start. Poor housing estates, the problems of children expelled from schools or who are truant; and street homelessness. These I believe are the most pressing of the im-

COLUMN ONE

Bobbies to get better boots for the beat

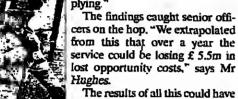

A policeman's lot is not a happy one, especially if he has the wrong kind

The results of a survey into accidents among the law enforcers suggest the flat-footed image of the bobby on the beat may not be that far off the mark. According to its findings, foot-related injuries could be costing the taxpayer up to £5.5m a year.

The injuries include slipping, tripping and falling over, and the huge cost comes from the time needed off work by the victims to receive from their accidents. In fact, the real figure could be even higher if the payment of ill-health pensions is taken into account.

Such a startling level of foot-related accidents comes in a survey carried out by the Association of Chief Police Officers last year, and reported m this week's Policing Today magazine. Bill Hughes, deputy chief constable of Hertfordshire and chairman of ACPO's uniform project group explains

"We conducted a study in West Yorkshire from June to August last year and we looked at all reports of foot-related injuries. We found that 48 officers had sustained injuries and sent them questionnaires, with 34 re-

The results of all this could have far-reaching consequences, at least for police footwear. The uniform project group is now working on a specification for a new standard police boot, with the emphasis on beiog water-proof and providing proper protection for the vulnerahle parts of a police officer's foot. In other words, the idea is to keep officers on their toes.

Once the specification is agreed for the new super boot, the Association of Police Purchasing Managers will draw up framework contracts for forces, so they can they invite bids for boot-making from different man-

Mr Hughes explains: "It will be down to individual forces to complete risk assessments, and, if they believe that personal protective equipment is required, then there is the specification, which should provide the best protection for officers."

Under oew health and safety laws next year local police forces will be for the first time be under a duty to supply safety equipment for their employees. And hoots are not all that may change - the distinctive helmet could be altered too.

A separate survey, also carried in Policing Today, suggests that as many as one in five officers suffers a head injury every year. Plans are already in hand for a tough "concept helmet" with goggles and in-built radio. But Mr Hughes explains of the concept helmet: "They are a good bit of protective kit, but you are a little bit 'tooled up' wearing them. We want something that is protective but does not make officers look ridiculous and makes them approachable."

.... Michael Streeter

CONTENTS

Leading stories Home news Babies World news Crime Politics Shopping Kyoto summit Leader and letters

Comment

Style Deborah Ross Interview Obituaries Shares Business Discoveries Crosswords 20 & The Eye, 9 The Eye, 10 Weather Television The Eye, 11-12 and Radio

PEOPLE

A cuddle at last for boy who lived in fear forced to live in a sterile bubble hecause of a rare illness has been cured by doctors in a revolutionary bone marrow transplant operation.

Jack Wheatley's condition meant that he could not even be cuddled hy his parents because his body's immune system could not combat the most basic of

The three-year-old was diagnosed as suffering Hyper IGM, an inherited immuno-deficiency condition, when he was six months old. Since then, he has had to live in a sterile tent into which was pumped sterile air.

Around his bed at Newcastle General Hospital was a red linc beyond which his patents, Jeanette ever," and Stuart, and any other visitors hold or cuddle their son, they had to be scrubbed down first by med-

Jack underwent a bone marrow transplant to try to combat the illness and doctors say it is the first time in Europe that an unrelated donor has been used successful-

Mrs Wheatley said she was now hoping to have her son home by Christmas. "Two weeks ago I hugged and kissed him for the first time in six months and it was wonderful," she said. "We are looking forward to getting home for Christmas. It's going to be hrilliant because we have been given the best present

Jack's older hrother, Ryan, 11.

A three-year-old boy who was could not pass. If they wanted to also suffers from the condition but Jack had shown no signs of it until he was six months old. Doctors are now hoping they can perform a similar operation on Ryan.

"After the problems with Ryan suffering from Hyper IGM we just thought 'oh no here we go again'." said Mrs Wheatley, "Normal life just came to an end, I stayed here in Newcastle with Jack while Stuart travelled between here and Lincolnshire, I just want to get him home now and try and get back to normal."

The disease, which only affects boys, is rare with only about 30 to 40 cases in the UK. It leaves the body's immune system unable to kill germs properly and the body susceptible to infections.

- Steve Baggan

The man who served 25 years for someone else

ing 25 years of a life sentence for a family but the family of Judith fying of documents. I don't think murder said yesterday: "There is Roberts have suffered too all for one moment somebody sat so much of my life I have lost." An- these years. I feel ashamed in a down and said 'we are going to drew Evans was speaking on his sense, because I have got my life convict this man'. But I was 17, imfirst weekend of freedom after the hack but they have not had justice mature, inadequate, virtually il-Court of Appeal ruled that his convictioo was unsafe.

He falsely admitted murdering a schoolgirl, Judith Roberts, when he was 17. Mr Evans "confessed" after suffering a mental breakdown, being dismissed from the Army and dreaming he had seen the face of the 14-year-old victim. He said yesterday: "What keeps going through my mind is the fact that there is a murderer still out there. But now they can go after yet." Speaking on Central Television's Tuesday Special - The Nightmare. Mr Evans added: "I know a lot of people my age will talk about their kids feaving school, their mortgages and their jobs. They are talking about things which have been occupying them for the best part of their lives and all I have got to talk about is 25 years floating around in a dusthin.

There is so much ... I have lost." But he insists he will not hehim and I hope they will, because come bitter: "I can't, because

A man freed on appeal after serviti is not right. We have suffered as there was no conspiracy, no falsiliterate and that's why what happened to me is so horrific. They took advantage of my lack of maturiry." Mr Evans, who says he does not even know how to board a bus or write a cheque, is trying to rehuild his life.

That means spending time with his parents. Bill and Joan, and his sister Sandra who used to take caravan holidays near his prison to visit him. Mrs Evans said: "Seeing him again, it is like the birth

UPDATE

British companies 'inspiring'

A multi-media company, a phone retailer, a double-glazing maker, a fish freezer and a toy distributor were among those that topped a survey of Britain's fastest growing companies.

Topping the Virgin Atlantic Fast Track 100 league table was multimedia company Eyretel, which produces digital voice recording equipment used by call centres, emergency services and financial trading rooms. The survey was conducted by entrepreneur and academic Hamish Stevenson. Dr Stevenson is the Virgin Atlantic Research Fellow in Entrepreneurship at Templeton College, Oxford University. For his study, he ranked companies by their compound annual sales growth between 1993 and 1996. Horsham-hased Eyretel, set up in 1990 by Roger Keenan, saw its turnover grow by a staggering 215 per ceot year on year over the past three years. Among the other companies included in the top 10 of the Fast Track 100 were mobile phone retailer DX Communications of Glasgow, fisher freezer Simpson DR (Chilled Foods) of Hull, computer assembler Roldec Systems of Wolverhampton, and toy distributor Vivid Imaginations of Haslemere. Richard Branson, the Virgin chief, said: "The report is inspiring. Reading through it for the first time, I was amazed by the sheer range of companies. I find it enormously encouraging that British eotrepreneurs are exploring every avenue in providing quality products and services to their customers." Companies were judged on their annual compound growth rate, with minimum sales of £250,000 in 1993 and minimum sales of £3m in 1996. Between them, they increased their combined sales nearly seven-fold between 1993 and 1996, with an average growth rate of 100 per cent. Their combined turnover in 1997 is forecast to exceed £2.7bn and the firms have seen a fivefold increase in their combined worldorce over the past three years to 12,500 new jobs. Mr Branson added: "All of the Virgin Atlantic Fast Track 100 companies have achieved mouth-watering turnover growth." The research was co-sponsered by Coopers & Lybrand and Mercury Asset Management.

WORKPLACE

Bosses get into Christmas spirit

Company bosses will be playing Santa this Christmas, paying towards the office party or picking up the whole tab, according to a new survey today. More than half of 260 organisations polled by the Institute of Management (IoM) said they planned to contribute to the festivities, with one in three paying for everything. Almost one in five firms will be paying their staff a Christmas bonus, while two out of five managers will give gifts to their workers. Just over half of the companies surveyed plan to close between Christmas and the New Year. Roger Young, director general of the IoM, said: "Christmas is a great opportunity for all hard-working teams to celebrate success and have some seasonal fun. "Managers can use the occasioo to reward the efforts of the past year and fire their people with enthusiasm for the year ahead."

FOOD

Curry given a warm reception

Indian food is more popular than ever in the UK and curry is now the most popular ready-made meal bought from the ethnic food section in supermarkets, a study reveals today.

The popularity of Indian cuisine in restaurants and takeaways has filtered through to the retail sector, says market analysis company Datamonitor. Sales of Indian chilled, frozen and ready made meals have overtaken Chinese and Italian foods, it adds. Since 1992, sales of curry-based canned ready meals have shot up by more than 15 per cent, compared to an increase of less than 1 per cent for noodle-based products.

And sales of Indian chilled ready meals are worth a staggering £37m compared to £26.3m for Chinese meals. In the lucrative frozen ready meals segment, Indian recipes have overtaken Oriental as the most popular, with sales worth £72m.

Cooking Indian meals at home has become a popular culinary pasttime and sales of Indian-style wet sauces have climbed by more than 24 per cent a year and now account for 16 per cent of wet cooking sauces, up from nearly 11 per cent in 1992.

In the dry cooking sauce market, Indian has overtaken Orieotal and now lies in second place behind Mexican food. Datamonitor's UK Ethic Food report said: "Manufacturers have begun to realise the range of Indian recipes which can be exploited. This has seen the introduction of whole new ranges, particularly Balti foods, which have given great impetus to sales of Indian food."

Make a song and dance with your Christmas present

Give Theatre Tokens They can be used at over 160 theatres nationwide, including all of London's West End.

Simply buy Theatre Tokens from most branches of WH Smith, John Menzies, Hammicks, Books etc., through Ticketmaster 0171 344 4444, Tickets London 0171 416 6012

Call our 24 hour Tokenline 0171 240 8800

McCartney tells of Linda's cancer battle

Sir Paul McCartney, whose wife, Linda, is recovering from a two-year hattle with cancer, iold how the 12-steps of Alcoholics Anonymous helped them cope. In an interview with Sir David Frost, Sir Paul described how the diagnosis of a lifethreatening disease "focuses ou on the things you think are important in life" and "stops you messing around." That was about the only good thing you can say about it.

Asked whether the experience had changed his feeling to-wards " 'It' or God". Sir Paut said: "I think so, although t don't like 'change your feelings'. It makes you talk to 'It' or God a little more often, which is a good thing." He and Linda found strength from the 12steps programme issued to Alcoholics Anonymous members. sent to them by a fricod. A step saying people should "hand over" their fears and anxieties when they cannot cope, had been particularly useful. "I think unless you are very religious, you live your life thinking there is no one to hand it over to. I think it was a hlessing for us to find, again through this 12-step programme a friend sent us." He and the other Beatles had made a pact that whoever died first would send back a message if there was an afterlife. So far there had been no word. "Stuart Sutcliffe was the first to die and I didn't have a message. When John (Lennon) died, he knew the deal, but I never had a message from him."

TOURIST RATES
Australia (dollars)	2,40	Italy (lira)	2.856
Austria (schillings)	20.39	Japan (yen)	214, 18
Belgium (francs)	59,97	Malta (lira)	0.63
Canada ($)	2.32	Netherlands (guilders)	3.26
Cyprus (pounds)	0.84	Norway (kroner)	11.82
Denmark (kroner)	H.H	Portugal (escudos)	294.51
France (francs)	9.71	Spain (pesetas)	244.96
Germany (marks)	2,91	Sweden (kroner)	12.78
Greece (drachmei)	463.61	Switzerland (francs)	2.35
Hong Kong ($)	12.63	Turkey (lira)	320.866
Ireland (punts)	1.10	US ($)	1.64
		Sour	ce: Thomas Cool
1		Rates for indicat	ion purposes onl

7.30 FOR 8

ZITS

by Chris Priestley

by Jerry Scott & Jim Borgman

 $\frac{1}{g^{2}}\gamma = \gamma g(1/2\pi)^{2}\sigma^{2}$

Couples counselling or make or break

FEATURES

hookers declare war on writers

leminist

ramble to dev W strain of kill

حيكنا من الاجل

IN TOMORROW'S INDEPENDENT

Couples counselling on TV: make or break? FEATURES

Bond: What's he got that you haven't? THE EYE

TB: could the disease that killed Orwell return to haunt the middle classes?

Happy hookers declare war on feminist writers

Prostitutes are furious with feminist academics who they accuse of making money from portraying them as victims. Working women tell ian Burrell that they are happy in their jobs, while feminists argue that the idea of a "happy hooker" is a myth.

Cherie, by her own admission. makes "a lot of money" from her work. She has not, she says, been coerced into having sex with strangers and is a prostitute by choice, "I cannot say the men that I have contact with are the type of people I would like to go out to dinner with. But they are inoffensive, generous people who are willing to pay for a service which I am happy to provide when they are paying me." she said.

Some feminist writers would not believe her. A bitter row has broken out he-Iween women academics who believe prostitution is a form of abuse and working prostitutes who object to being portrayed as victims.

Things came to a head this weekend as some prostitutes and outreach groups pledged with academics who specialise in writing about them. Much of the rancour stems from arecent conference called "Prostitution: Violence Against Women and Children*. Organised by the Leeds Metropolitan University, it was described as the first conference which "will not be a dehating platform for those who believe that prostitution is a job like any other. T. Some delegates left in disgust.

Cherie (her working name), who works from a house in Leicester, was livid at the conference message, "Itis very annoying to have academies tell me t am being abused by doing something that they are making an awful lot of money writing ahout," she said.

Another prostitute left in tears after an argument with a delegate who accused her husband of being her pimp.

Also among those who left earle was Sue Johnson, a prostitute for 19 years who now works as director of the Pros-something they are making an awful lot of money writing about,' said on prostitute group in Nottingham, "I take great offence if anyone says I am so thick or so much of a victim that I cannot think for myself." she said.

While accepting some women were forced into prosprostitutes who attended as titution, she added: "The academies are radical feminists who cannot see the real issues around prostitution. They were portraying all the women as victims and all the men as pervens. They will never stop the demand for prostitution how are they going to rehahilitate punters?"

> The conference was used to launch plans for Britain's first "Johns School", designed to re-educate kerh-crawlers. The idea, pioneered in America, involves first offenders being instructed by the courts to prostitutes would tell them of the damage their activities titute Outreach Workers are causing both to the women and the community. West Yorkshire police was represented at the first working group meeting this week.

The conference chair, Jalna Hanmer, a professor in women's studies at Leeds Metropolitan University, said there was no intention to offend prostitutes, "No one who is doing work in this area really wants to blame women or say they are ... passive. Quite. the contrary, we want to work with women to make their lives better and help women who are in [prostitution] get out it they want it." she said.

But she argued that research showed many prostitutes who had believed they were happy in their work later changed their minds. "It's a way of trying to handle a reattend a school where former ally difficult situation. You present an 'I'm alright' face to the world," she said. "Finally you have to drop that and acknowlege 'I'm not alright really and you need to leave prostitution."

Among the conference speakers was author Sheila Jeffreys, who launched her book The Idea of Prostitution. in which she challenges the idea "that men are entitled to abuse women and profit from their exploitation. She said the feminist argument against prostitution was being undermined by the growing clamour for "sexual liberalism, economic individualism and free choice ideas".

The conference was opened by Emma Humphreys, who as a 17-year-old prostitute killed a man in defence against rape and served seven years in prison. She worked as a prostitute from the age of 11 and is now planning a book to dispel the myths about child prostitution.

Royal employees spent £1 m decorating own apartments

Two senior royal employees have spent more than £1 m on refurbishing their Kensington Palace apartments, according to evidence given to MPs. Fran Abrams, Political Correspondent, says the Public Accounts Committee will call for a curb on public subsidies of accommodation inside the Royal Palaces.

to disclose its affairs has caused a five-year delay in publication of the final report on property services, salaries and accommodation in its palaces. Hearings were held two years ago but letters and questions have been going back and forth ever since. Finally the PAC is ready to produce its report but, under a Conservative chairman, it will stop short of demanding that the Royals should hand back one or more of their five publicly owned and funded palaces. However, Labour members who have campaigned for greater openness and accountability will call for further action.

A row over the Royal Family's reluctance

Evidence submitted to the committee has revealed that two senior royal employees have spent more than £J.1m doing up their own personal apartments.

Michael Peat, the Royal Household's director of finance, and John Tiltman, its director of property services, have both moved into the accommodation in Kensington Palace. Mr Peat pays £338 per week in rent, while Mr Tiltman's job comes with a salary reduced by £230 per week in lieu of rent. Neither has to pay council tax or other bills.

Before moving into the palace, Mr Peat lived in Wandsworth and Mr Tillman in Croydon. Mr Peat was given £115,000 from the public purse for furniture.

The report will say the accommodation

Michael Peat: Palace employee given £115,000 for furniture given to relatives, employees and pensioners of the Royal bousehold is so valuable that if market rents were charged most could never afford to live there. It is also expected to raise the question of how the occupants can pay the tax which should be chargeable on the dwellings, which are regarded by the government as taxable ben-

The Royal Family has promised to cut down the number of grace and favour homes, employees' residences and pensioners' apartments which are maintained

But since 1994 the number has remained steady at 285. The Royal Household has promised to reduce that 10 205 as they beme vacant, but there has been no change.

The Royals object to the use of the term grace and favour," saying almost all the accommodation is for royals, employees and pensioners. In evidence to the committee officials said in the next generation the only family members with the right to accommodation would be the Queen's four of the family who are currently there out."

children and Princes Harry and William. Many of those who live in the palaces have only nominal duties. For example, 13 military knights of Windsor Castle are given homes because they are required to attend weekly services in ceremonial dress. When evidence was given to the committee two years ago, eight apartments were occupied by royals, 226 by current employees, 27 by former employees and four through "grace and favour" arrangements. The Royal Family receives £7.9m a year from the Civil List, which pays the saluries of major royals and 296 staff, plus £20.6m in grant-in-aid which is used for the upkeep of the royal palaces. In return, revenues of around £80m are returned to the state.

The rents and salary abatements on the apartments come to £400,000 per year half the annual cost of maintenance.

One Labour member of the committee. Alan Williams, has been a long-term campaigner against excessive funding of the royals. He has also asked how the accommodation is properly taxed if it has never been valued. The last Chancellor. Kenneth Clarke, said the flats and houses were taxable benefits like any other.

Mr Williams said the Royal family should be made to give back Kensington Palace, St James' Palace and Clarence House - once the Queen Mother had died - to the state. They could live quite comfortably in Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle, he said.

A Buckingham Palace spokeswoman said there had never been any question of Mr Peat or Mr Tiltman benefiting personally from the refurbishment of their flats, The money would be recouped in tent over a 30-year period, she said, and much of it was required for fire safety reasons. "No grace and favour accommodation has been granted since 1991, and as they die il will become vacant. We made il clear that there are no plans to move members

Scramble to devolop vaccine for new strain of killer flu

Bird flu, the name given to a new, potentially fatal, strain of influenza, has claimed another victim in Hong Kong where it first came to light.

International researchers are scrambling to identify the characteristics of the virus, writes Stephen Vines in Hong Kong, amldst increasing fears of a pandemic.

Hong Kong health officials and experts from the Centre for Disease Control and prevention, based in Atlanta, USA, went into an emergency session vesterday after it was announced that a 54-year-old manhad died from the disease and a 13-yearold girl was fighting for her life in hospia strain of the influenza A virus, has killed one other person and infected a fourth.

Before researchers in Holland and the US discovered the first victim had died from the H5N1 virus, it had been thought that it was only found in poultry and could not be transmitted to humans. Lack of information about the new thi strain, and its ability to spread, has caused international authorities to urgently monitor the situation in Hong Kong. The World Health Organisation (WHO) was brought in when a three-year-old boy died last May after contracting the disease from chickens. Some 4.500 chickens died as a result of H5N1 intluenza infection last April.

In humans, hird flu develops into Reye Syndrome which affects the nervous system and liver with latal consequences.

Paul Saw, the deputy director of Hong Kong's health department, who chaired vesterday's emergency meeting, said the Bird flu, more properly known as H5N1, four victims had no connection and, at this stage, human-te-human transmission is not proven but he added: "We feel this possihility would need to be further looked into."

He said the WHO has been asked to "alert vaccine production centres in the world ... with a view to preparing the necessary vaccines". But he insisted there was no cause for panie as available evidence did not suggest the disease was widespread.

Daniel Lavancy, the WHO's headquarters chief in Geneva, said it would take at least six months to develop a vaccine against bird flu and feared that the spread of the disease would accelerate. "If we have four cases, yes, the virus is trying to seed itself in the population," he said.

Although the first victim died in May. it was not until August that doctors were able to confirm that the boy had died of hird flu. Hong Kong hospitals and clinics have now stepped up influenza surveillance activities to try and identify the existence

Currys POWERHOUSE

University chiefs furious over curbs on autonomy

University chiefs are In open revolt at the Government's new higher-education Bill, which they regard as a Draconian attack on university autonomy. Lucy Hodges says they plan to ask the Education Secretary to drop the powers he is giving himself to intervene in university life.

The Government's plan to introduce £1,000 tuition fees but stop universities charging any more than in top-up fees has angered vice-chancellors, who are seeking an urgent meeting with David Blunkett.

and unprecedented, the Teaching and Higher Education Bill should be opposed, they decided at a meeting last week.

Some vice-chancellors suggested that universities should refuse to co-operate over government reforms, including possibly the vocating such a course - it would cause mayuniversities are supposed to collect the new

Diana Warwick, chief executive of the vice-chancellors' committee, said: "These power to interfere politically with the courses universities run and with their ability to make totally reasonable charges for anything from field trips to photocopying. They go far beyond what would be necessary to rule out top-up fees. We will fight hard to get the reserve powers removed from the Bill."

The vice-chancellors would agree not to Described as unnecessary, excessive charge top-up fees to students if the Government provides what they consider to he adequate funding for the universities. In Department for Education and Employreturn they want Mr Blunkett to drop the clauses in the Bill which they regard as un-

At Friday's meeting, vice-chancellors new attempt looks altogether more serious.

£1,000 tuition fee. If that did happen - and called for a guarantee to be included in the there were one or two voices yesterday ad- Bill that money raised by student fees would be genuinely new, extra money for hem in higher education, because higher education and not be used merely to replace existing funding. At present, no university has hard plans to introduce top-up fees, though some vicechancellors in the "old" universities are powers give Government an unacceptable keen to keep the power to charge extra if government funding falls short. They are worried that the funding crisis in higher education is simply going to get worse. Under government spending plans, universities in the United Kingdom face a cut of 4.2 per cent, 1.5 per cent, 2.5 per cent and 2.4 per cent respectively over the next three years. And the higher-education funding council is predicting that more than half of universities will be in the red by the turn of the century. This is the third time the ment has tried to gain more control over the university system. Previous attempts have been fought off fairly easily but the Outward bound: Richard Branson on a parachute jump near Marrakesh, Morocco. The entrepreneur is in training for another attempt at the first non-stop round-the-world balloon flight next week

 ○ CITROËN

'Citroën's Xsara is top of the class'

Auto Express Quote OCT 97

'One of the highest specifications yet seen on a family hatch range'

Autocar Quote SEPT. '97

Insurance Quote DEC. '97 - MAR. '98

Column inches. The new Citroën Xsara is generating acres of them. Precisely what, is making the press so excited?

Well, the Xsara is a subtle form of social revolution.

It brings the standards of an executive saloon into the compact family sector.

The cabin is the biggest in its class. As is the boot.

It bristles with safety devices. Cunningly designed storage space means that there's somewhere to put things. For a change.

Technology abounds, from little touches like child lock indicators. To major innovations like automatic windscreen wipers.

Now we're introducing another subtle form of revolution.

Prices start at just £11,765 on the road.

And yet, unusually for a brand new model, we're offering one year's free insurance:

Bringing the executive qualities of the Xsara within the reach of yet more people.

Call 0800 262 262 for more details.

Or better still get down to your nearest Citroen Showroom.

Enough words.

Time for action.

CITROËN XSARA LOOK BEYOND THE OBVIOUS

XSARA PRICES START FROM C11.786 ON THE ROAD FOR THE 1.4-X MODEL CAR SHOWN XSARA 1 8: 18V EXCLUSIVE C15.405 ON THE ROAD FOR THE ROAD FOR NUMBER PLATES, DELIVERS AND 12 MONTHS ROAD FUND LICENCES OPTIONAL METALLIC ASARA PRICES START FROM E11,786 ON THE ROAD FOR THE ROAD

Galleries welcome museum ruling on admission fees

The British Museum's decision not to introduce admission fees for at least another year in the hope of getting government funding in 1999 was welcomed yesterday by non-charging museums and gallenes across the country.

The threat of the introduction of £5-a-head charge to cope with the shortfalls in the museum's hudget had prompted fears of a domino effect in other institutions, according to Timothy Mason, director of the Museums and Galleries Commission. "If the trustees had succumbed it would have made it very difficult for curators to argue with local authorities that the tradition of public access is of paramount importance," he said yesterday.

In a meeting at the weekend the British Museum's trustees decided they would look at alternative ways of coping with the predicted deficit of £3.9m for 1998-1999 including increasing rates for loans and exhibitions, attracting more voluntary donations and making internal economies. However, their hopes are pinned on the Department of Culture, which has carried out a spending review and is due to make an announcement on Wednesday.

FoE in clash over TV advert

Friends of the Earth has clashed with the Independent Television Commission over an advertisement for the visitors centre at the nuclear waste processing site at Sellafield in Cumbria. The environmental pressure group is angry that the watchdog has rejected complaints from it and 19 viewers about an advert that appeared to show nuclear waste processing is a safe activity.

The advert, by British Nuclear Fuels, showed a match being burnt over and over along with a voice-over which claimed: "What kind of science can take a fuel, hurn it and turn the ashes back into fuel to burn again? A fuel formed in the hearts of giant stars .. Of the 3 per cent that's left over as waste, most is cased in concrete and steel. Or turned into glass."

Friends of the Earth and the viewers objected that by referring to waste being turned into glass, steel or concrete the advert was referring to the politically contentious subject of dealing with nuclear waste.

Under rule 10 of the ITC's advertising code TV commercials deemed politically partial are banned. It this clause which bans Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth from advertising on television.

Risk of surgical instruments

There is a risk that surgical instruments used to remove the eyes of a woman suffering from CJD could have infected more transplant recipients, the Government confirmed yesterday. The move follows claims in the Sunday Mail newspaper that at least six patients may have been infected by instruments used on Marion Hamilton, 53, whose infection with CJD was not known until after her death from lung cancer.

A Scottish Office spokesman told PA News: "We are aware that further concerns have arisen because of a potential risk of transmission of CJD infection through contamination of the instruments used in the retrieval of Mrs Hamilton's eyes. The risk of transmission is lower than that from transplantation of eye tissue, however we have taken expert advice on the level of risk, and the consultants concerned are being contacted. Unless a patient hears from a consultant, there is no need

Police use CS spray at match

Football supporters' organisations are concerned at what is believed to be the first police use of CS spray at a British soccer ground. Officers used the spray when trouble broke out among visiting supporters at the end of Saturday's FA Cup 2nd Round match between Scunthorpe and fikeston.

One policeman was being kicked on the ground and CS was the best option. Humherside police said.

Six win lottery jackpot for any individual to worry."

Six winners shared Saturday's £2.2m lottery jackpot, Camelot has announced. The winning numbers were 30, 5, 19, 9, 21, 49 and the bonus number was 43.

donations to St Joseph's. Your gifts have helped us to bring love, comfort and peace to over 900 terminally ill people and their families over the past year. We look forward to your continued friendship and support in the future.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPICE MARE STREET, HACKNEY, LONDON ES 4SA. (Charley Ref. No. 251325)

Aids: why

5/BABIES

welcome museum admission fees

ish over TV ade

- · 200 $5.773 AT 21.344 F. الساسية بجا × 4-2 × 15 − 1 × 1

rgical instrume 2 ta 11 - 11 74422 g setting of the c والمناه المناه والمعطولين الم iga iku 🐷 🐃 A Company

後とうなべまという。 grander. Pro

general without

1976 P

g Fyzik Maria 2 CS spray at mail $\sup_{\lambda \in A_{k}} \left(\frac{1}{2} \sum_{i \in A_{k}} \sum_{j \in A_{k}} (1 - \alpha_{ij})^{N_{k} - 1 - \alpha_{ij}} \right)$

Appropriate the Con-ALAST CONTRACT Same of the same o ettery jackpot

greety in the contract of Aids: why shouldn't mothers be told the truth?

Britain is facing a new Aids epidemic – in children. A growing number of babies are being infected because their mothers have never had an HIV test. Jeremy Laurance, Health Editor. looks at the threat - and how it could be stopped.

"Don't die of ignorance" was the slogan once used to alert the nation to the dangers of Aids. Now, the worst infectious condition of modern times is being passed to the next generation because of ignorance.

Pregnant women who are infected with the virus are being kept in the dark because there is no routine HIV testing in antenatal clinics. More than 250 HIV-positive women gave birth in 1996, the highest number yet recorded. In total, more than 450 bahies are known to have been infected, with the oldest survivors now in their mid-

Up to one in three babies born to HIV-infected women though it may be years before 3 per cent. they find out. With a combination of drug treatment and other precautions - avoiding breast-feeding and opting for a Caesarean delivery - mothers cent of infected women in Loncan cut their risk of having an infected haby by two-thirds.

Consultants in HIV medicine say too little is being done to protect unborn babies from the disease. A working party of the Royal Colleges of Obstetricians, Paediatricians and Midwives is preparing guidelines on antenatal HIV testing but some doctors fear these will not go far enough. A series of papers on the issue is to appear in the British Medical Journal in got to be done." the New Year.

consultant genito-urinary physician in charge of women with mon. Only when their bahies are much lower than in the UK.

were born and then fell ill of Aids-related illnesses did they discover they were infected.

" I get women screaming at me that all this blood was taken while they were pregnant; surely it must have been tested for HIV. But it wasn't. There is a public misconception that if blood is taken it is tested for everything."

Midwives are supposed to offer all pregnant women an HTV test but they often fail to explain why it is important. Dr de Ruiter said: "It is very much left up to the midwife. We believe it should not just be offered, it should be recommended. It is a shocking thing to learn that you are HTV positive and the women will need counselling hut there are now very good treatments we can offer to reduce the risk to the baby. That is a clear benefit." Anonymous testing for HTV has been carried out in antenatal clinics for years to assess the extent of spread of the disease. Last year 34 HIVpositive women gave birth at St Thomas's but only 14 knew they were carrying the virus. In some hospitals, the proportion of infected mothers who know become infected themselves, they carry the virus is only 2 to > Dr Diana Gibb, a consultant paediatrician at the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond Street, said fewer than 10 per don were detected during pregnancy. A study of the cost of testing is expected to show that it is less than the cost of treating the affected children throughout their lives.

"About one in six bahies of infected mothers will carry the virus at hirth. That rate is doubled if the mothers breast-feed. We now have substantial opportunities to reduce the transmission rate. Something has

By giving the mother the Dr Annemiek de Ruiter, Aids drug AZT during pregnancy and avoiding breast-feeding after birth the transmission HTV at St Thomas's Hospital, rate can be cut from 30 per cent London, said pregnant women to 5-10 per cent. In France and syphilis but not for HTV, even States, most women are tested though syphilis is far less com- for HIV and transmission rates much wanted a child."

Gill Hickman and her son Malachai: Although she was HIV positive when she was trying for a baby, he was born HIV negative Photograph: Nicola Kurtz

'I'm very optimistic – I felt my child would be all right'

Gill Hickman was luckier than some. She knew she was carrying the Aids virus when four years ago she decided to try for a baby.

"When I discovered I was HIV positive in 1989 I thought it was a death sentence. Later I realised it wasn't, and that if I had a were routinely tested for in the main cities in the United haby, it wouldn't definitely get ill. I was 38 and I very

When Malachai was born

she avoided breast feeding to reduce the risk of transmitting the virus to him. But she turned down the offer of AZT while she was pregnant. "I am anti-drugs. I wondered what the side effects would be. I am an incredibly optimistic person and I felt really confident that Malachai would be all right." He was. He is clear of the

are both well. Ms Hickman believes pregnant women should be offered an HIV test but they should not be pressed into it.

"It has got to be explained sensitively and thoughtfully because the implications are so serious. Women have to think about the implications for themselves as well as their children."

Some children born with years while others develop se- abused at school, and neighrious Aids-related illnesses within months. With the development of new drugs they are surviving longer - to 15 and 16 - but a question mark remains over how long they will ultimately live. Fear of prejudice means most affected families seek anonymity. Paula Harrowing, of Body and Soul, the Aids charity for families, said chil-bours had turned nasty, after information about their HIV status had leaked. "One man with an infected child told the neighbours because he wanted support. He came back from work and found the family cat nailed to the door with a note saying 'don't come hack'. Very few of those affected will take the risk of revealing they carry

Jeremy Laurence

Kidnap Karli secure

Karli Hawthorne woke yesterday morning next to her mother Tanya, who is not letting her two-day-old daughter out of her sight. She slept in a cot by the hospital bed of her 30-year-old mother after being returned to her family following a 12hour drama when she was snatched from the maternity unit. Karli and her mother were said to be fine in Basildon Hospital, Essex, yesterday. They will probably be allowed home on Wednesday.

Security at the hospital was tight, with two police officers on guard in Willow Ward, in the maternity unit, where Karli and her mother were recovering. A third officer was posted at the entrance to the maternity unit

The hospital spokeswoman said: "I have spoken to the matron on the ward today and Karli and her mother are both fine. The baby is at her mother's bedside. All of the habies here are at their mothers' bedsides and are never let out of their mothers' sight."

Mrs Hawthorne, who had Karli by Caesarean section on Friday, was not expected to be detained at the hospital any longer than the normal period of four to five days. There is certainly no medical reason that I am aware of which could change that," a spokeswoman said.

"It will be Tuesday or Wednesday before she is discharged, but it will more than likely be Wednesday." An Essex Police spokeswoman said: "Once Tanya is discharged the three officers will not he at the hospital any more."

A woman is to appear in court in Basildon today in connection with the abduction of Karll.

MJN PII Range

From The Award Winning UK PC Manufacturer

Take a closer look at our new range of 'Best Buy' high performance systems with Intel Pentium II and IBM 6x86MX M-2 MMX processors, PCTV, voice recognition and VideoPhone.

MJN 233M-2

IBM 6x86MX PR233 processor

6.4Gb Seagate ultra ATA hard

56K Rockwell flash upgradeable

24 Speed MAX LG CD-ROM drive

Full VideoPhone including colour

Simply Speaking Gold

MJN ATX system with PC 97chipset

4Mb SIS Advanced Graphics

with Microsoft direct 3D

15" SVGA 0.28do screen

512K pipeline burst cache

Voice recognition with IBM

(17" optional)

video camera

All stendard

64Mb FDO RAM

- · Intel Pentium? II 233Mhz processor with MMX™ technology 32Mb SDRAM 4.3Gb Seagate ultra ATA hard
- PC-TV system with Teletext and video capture • 56k Rockwell flash upgradeable 4Mb ATI Rage II+ DVD 3D
- graphics 24 Speed MAX LG CD-ROM drive 15" SVGA 0.28dp screen
- (17" optional) 512k Prpeline burst cache VideoPhone receive for incoming
- VideoPhone calls Voice recognition with IBM Simply Speaking Gold MIN ATX system with Intel 440LX PC'97 chipset

All standard features below

Standard Features: Windows 95, Lotus SmartSuite 97, Quoken, Pressworks, DesignWorks, Homewese, Lotus Mail, IBM AntWinus and SmartPics preloaded. Sound Force 625 mains powered speaker system, 3.5° 1.44Mb floppy drive; Sound Force 625 mains powered speaker system, 3.5° 1.44Mb floppy drive; PSV2 mouse; 405 keyboard; software MPCG; Year 2000 compliant 8f0S; PSV2 mouse; 405 keyboard; software MPCG; Year 2000 compliant 8f0S; PSV2 mouse; 405 keyboard; software mouse cont. One year upgrant.

All Offers

End 12th

December

mouse port, fast serial port, parallel port and garnes port. One year warranty PLUS MODELS are only £49 +VAT = £57.58 inc. VAT extra and include Joystick, headset microphone and 10 CD multimedia titles.

MJN 300-2

- MJN 266-2 Intel Pentium II 266Mhz 64Mb SDRAM
- 6.4Gb Seagate ultra ATA hard · PC-TV system with Teletext and
- 56K Rockwell flash upgradeable
- 8Mb AGP ATI Rage Pro 3D graphics

 24 speed MAX LG CD-ROM drive 15" SVGA 0.28do screen
- (17" optional) 512K pipeline burst cache VideoPhone receive for incoming
- VideoPhone calls Voice recognition with IBM Speaking Gold PC'97 chipset

All standard features below

Model:775

Model:800

Intel Pentium II 300Mhz

processor with MMX technology 64Mb SDRAM

. 6.4Gb Seagate ultra ATA hard

. PC-TV system with Teletext and video capture 56K Rockwell flash upgradeable

graphics 24 speed MAX LG CD-ROM drive

Creative Labs 3D wavetable sound 15" SVGA 0.28dp screen

Voice recognition with IBM Simply

MUN ATX system with Intel 440LX

SMb AGP ATT Rage Pro 3D

512k pipeline burst cache

VideoPhone calls

Speaking Gold

INTEREST FREE OPTION BUY NOW PAY LATER Only on PLUS models

Example, MIN 23384-2 PLUS: Pay just £158,03 (10%) depose and then nothing for 6 marries. After 6 months pay the level. Total under a cash price = £1299 + £49 + £25 devices + ¥47 + £1578,03 inc. ¥47 APR 04, only 6 rean replace when 6 months, framed side magnetic over longer pend of 2.5 years of APR 23,5%. Finance is subject to status. Winter orands are available on inquient.

Telephone Sales Lines Open Mon - Fn 8,30am - 7,00pm, Sat 9,00am - 5,00pm MUN Technology LLC. Granulle House, Bacado,  Ro. Smorstone, Runten, Lance, BB12 TG1, Fax (1282) 77, 48-43.

arrangement fees, valuation fees, mortgage indemnity fees, early redemption penalties.

wonder other mortgage lenders are worried.

 Mortgage example of £89,000 repayable over 25 years (300 monthly payments). Monthly Repayments Monthly saving (after tax relief) (Variable) with Direct Line WOOLWICH £198,687 €630.40 HALIFAX £617.01 £195,521 9.0% €48.54 ALLIANCE & LEICESTER 9.0% 1617.0 £48.54 £195,372 £178.258 £568.47 DIRECT LINE APRs based on Standard Variable Rate Repayment mortgages, correct at 1st December 1997.

They should be, because not one of these mortgage lenders can compete with Direct Line.

As the table shows our variable rate mortgage could save you around

MIRAS has been calculated under current tax legislation which may after.

No legal fees it you transfer your mortgage without moving house?.

We refund your valuation costs^{††}.

 No arrangement, mortgage indeutnity or early redemption fees. You can borrow up to 90% of the value of your home.

We guarantee to save you 20% th on your existing huildings insurance.

No reason to call anyone else then when you can call Direct Line.

0181 649 9099

0161 831 9099

LONDON

MANCHESTER

0141 221 9099 GLASGOW

CALL ANYTIME 8am to 8pm Monday to Friday and 9am to 5pm Saturday. Please quote ref. INDI66

Direct Line Financial Services Limited, 250 St. Vincent Street, Glasgow. G2 5SH

You must be aged 18 to 62 Subject to status. Security required Written quotations on request. Legal fees paid if mortgage on existing home is transferred using Direct Line solicitors partiage. If own solicitor used and the feet amount to more than 1300, Direct Line will pay the excess up to a maximum of £200. Offer may be withdrawn at any time. I Standard valuation fee will be refunded when the mortgage is set up. Some mortgages may require payment of a fee to the existing lender when being transferred. 111 The guaranteed insurance spring only applies if your current insurance is arranged with your lender and is subject to our normal underwiding criteria and corresponding levels of cores. Calls recorded and randomly mortgaged. Direct Line and the red phone on wheels are the trademarks of Direct Line insurance pic, used with its parameters. YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPRYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT

www.directline.co.uk

Russians see plane disaster as fresh evidence of nation's decay

ing again yesterday as rescuers, four engines had failed. working in Arctic temperatures, ple who died when a cargo plane smashed into a block of flats.

the memory of millions by pictures of the plane's vast white tail jutting out of the huilding's ruins, will deepen the despair of many Russians who see such disasters as evidence of the national decay that has set in since the end of the Soviet Union.

The Russian government yesterday suspended all flights by Antonov-124s, a military cargo plane, until it has estahlished why one of them fell out of the sky 20 seconds after taking off from Irkutsk in southern explosion. Russia was in mourn- complained that two of their toll could rise to 62.

sibility that its cargo - two Sukhoi-27 fighter jets, destined loaded. The truth may lie withpatched to Moscow for analysis.

though the building caught fire. claiming the lives of two of them. Yesterday, watched by groups of the bereaved, 1,600 through the wreckage in temperatures that fell to as low as minus 30C. Sergei Shoigu, the Siberia on Saturday. News Russian emergencies minister,

Less than a week after scores of agency reports yesterday said told reporters that some people Siberian miners died in an that after take-off the pilots were still missing and the death

Last night, the Russian tele-Other speculation centred retrieved the remains of 48 peo- on poor quality fuel, and the pos- accounts of the accident, accompanied by harrowing pictures of the injured. Russia can The accident, scalded into for Hanoi - was incorrectly sometimes seem hardened to hloodshed and tragedy. But in the aircraft's flight recorders, this disaster, coupled with 67 which have been found and disdeaths in last Tuesday's blast in a coal mine in Novokuznetsk. Miraculously, the 340-tonne has been a heavy blow. It is one plane narrowly missed an or-phanage of 150 children, al-limit the effects of a political that Boris Yeltsin, struggling to scandal and global financial turmoil, could do without So, too, could the city of Irkutsk, for whom it was the return of a rescue workers rummaged nightmare: in 1994, it was the scene of Russia's deadliest post-Soviet crash, when a Tu-154 crashed, killing 124 people.

The wreckage of the Antonov cargo plane which crashed into a block of flats in Irkutsk - Phil Reeves, Moscow

Photograph: Sergei Karpekhin/Reute

NEW YORK NEW YORK

OR ROME ROME... PRAGUE PRAGUE... TOKYO TOKYO..

LUFTHANSA WINTER SPECIALS

All Prices are quoted for 2 people travelling tog				ether.
۱	FROM: LONDON/BIRMI				Dunings	Economy
	TO TUBORE	Business	Economy . £	TO: EASTERN EUROPE	Business £	2
	TO: EUROPE ANKABA	£ 862	£ 378	ALMATY	287≛	298 398
	ATHENS	800	298	ASHKABAD	2300	898
ı	BARCELONA	538	288	BAKU	1794	898
ı	BASLE	450	248	BELGRADE	972	378
1	BOLOGNA	556	253	BUCHAREST	948	368
ı	COPENHAGEM	496	258	BUDAPEST	658	298
1	FARO	630	258	EKATERINBURG	2300 6 9 6	678 358
ı	FLORENCE	560	278	KATOWICE KAZAN	1972	578
4	GENEVA	450	23.9	KIEV	1312	293
ı	GOTHENBURG	552	258	MINSK	1145	448
ı	GRAZ	590	293 27 8 .	MOSCOW	1410	298
1	HELSINKI	650 626	276 . 318	NIZHNIY NOVGOROD	1692	858
ı	ISTANBUL LINZ	578	298	NOVOSIBIRSK	2874	853
1	LISBON	594	268	PERM	1972	678
ı	LYON	50-	278	PRAGUE	528	298
ı	MADRID	498	298	RIGA	1106	448
1	MALAGA	636	258	SAMARA	1972 1040	678 S18
1	MARSEILLE	588	288	SOFIA ST. PETERSBURG	1220	398
ı	MILAN	478	259	TASHKENT	2702	858
П	NAPLES	708	278	WARSAW	638	358
ı	NICE	582	245	ZAGREB	33 8	308
ı	OPORTO	530	268
ı	osto	524	258	TO: AFRICA
Н	PISA	560	278	ABU DHABI	2022	598
1	ROME	538	258	ACCRA	2814	758
8	STOCKHOLM	516	258	ADDIS ABABA	2302 1470	998 448
ı	THESSALONIK! TURIN	788 520	298 258	ALEXANDRIA ASMARA	2302	928
ı	VALENCIA	520 590	256	BEIRUT	1498	738 380
ı	AEMICE	586	258	CAIRO	1470	443
ı	VIENNA	590	228	CAPE TOWN	36-12	815
H	ZUR!CH	450	238	DAMASCUS	1498	518
4				DUBAI	2022	548
1	TO: ASIA/PACIFIC			HARABE	3044	. 858
3	BANGKOK	3428	618	JEDDAH	1554	683
1	BEIJING	3280	998	JOHANNESBURG	317.1	798
ı	BOMBAY DELH:	2804 2804	596	KHARTOUM KUWAIT	1894 1725	878 598
1	HO CHI MINH CITY	260 ~ 3816	· 598 793	LAGOS	2530	596 588
ł	HONG KONG	3559	738	NAIROBI	2356	578
ı	JAKARTA	3536	783	RIYADH	1674	693
ı	KABACHI	2484	ଌ ୭ଞ	TEL AVIV	924	398
4	KUALA LUMPUR	3594	738	WINDHOEK	3132	958
ı	MADRAS	3148	768	FROM: LONDON
1	MANILA	3662	597	TO: GERMANY
П	NAGOYA	3976	1048	BREMEN	N/A	188
	OSAKA	3976 3976	598 786	COLOGNE	N/A	138
Н	SEOUL SHANGHA!	3342	798	DRESDEN	N/A	198
1	SINGAPORE .	3594	738	DUSSELDORF	N/A	133
И	TOKYO	3976	948	FRANKFURT	M/A	168
П				RAMBURG HANOVER	N/A N/A	176 178
1	TO: SOUTH AMERICA			LEIPZIG	N/A	185
Н	BUENOS AIRES	4350	1098	MUNICH	N/A	198
	MEXICO CITY	2738	545	NUREMBERG	N/A	198
	RIO DE JANEIRO	3862	818 	STUTTGART	N/A	178
	SANTIAGO	4992 3453	1098 818
	SAO PAULO	3652	010	FROM: BIRMINGHAM
	TO: NORTH AMERICA	/CANADA		TO: GERMANY	5165	100
	BOSTON	2750	423	DUSSELDORF	N/A N/A	138
	CHICAGO	5436	438	FRANKFURT MUNICH	N/A	188 198
	LOS ANGELES	4190	538	(A(O(4))OC	WA	130
	MIAMI	2888	438	FROM: MANCHESTER
	NEW YORK	2730	428	TO: GERMANY
	SAN FRANCISCO	4190	538	DUSSELDORF	N/A	178
	TORONTO	2584	488	FRANKFURT	R∜A	198

BEUSMAH

MUNICH

Airport/security taxes will be in addition for each passenger travelling

3122

VANCOUVER

FOR THE PRICE OF 1 IN BUSINESS CLASS

SAVE UP TO 50% IN ECONOMY CLASS

Lufthansa

Lufthansa in association with Thomas Cook are proud to bring you these exclusive 'Winter Special' fares.

Choose from any of the 118 destinations listed, and you can take a friend or partner with you at no extra cost. The two of you could spend the weekend waltzing in Vienna for only £228 (min. stay Saturday night), or line dancing in Chicago for as little as £438 (min. stay 5 nights).

To book, simply call in at your local Thomas Cook Shop (there are nearly 400 nationwide) or phone the Thomas Cook Credit Card Booking Line on 0990 10 15 20. Book now - this offer closes 23 December 1997. All prices quoted are for return flights for two people travelling between 04 December 1997 - 31 May 1998. (Outbound travel is not permitted 01-13 April 1998.) And remember Lufthansa cannot accept booking enquiries directly, as this special offer is only available through Thomas Cook. Why not book your hotel accommodation with Thomas Cook at the same time as your flight? Prices per person per night start at just £20 in Toronto, £23 in Madrid, £27 in Barcelona, £30 in Prague and £35 in Rome and San Francisco (based on two people sharing between Jan - Mar 1998).

Credit Card Booking Line 0990 10 15 20 Lines are open Mon-Fri 9am-9pm, Saturday and Sunday 10am-6pm Thomas Cook

1: This offer is available to participants of the Luthiansa/Thomas Cook promotion having fully completed the voucher printed on this page. Offer applies to Economy Class and Business Class travel from the UK to destinations listed, at the prices stated and subject to availability in specific booking classes. 2: All booking enquiries must only be via the promotion partner Thomas Cook. Bookings must be made by 23.12.97 at your local Thomas Cook Shop or by phoning the Thomas Cook Credit Card Booking Line on 0990 10 15 20". (Please quote code LTA,) A handking charge of 1% applies to payment by credit/charge card up to a maximum of £10 per transaction.

Thomas Cope Man-Fir Sam-Spin. Sat 2 Sun 10am-Spin. To ensure quality customer service, calls to Physics Direct are recorded. 3: Travel must take place between 04.12.97 – 31.05.98 inclusive. No outbound travel is permitted between 01-13 April 1998 inclusive. Limited availability over Christmas and New Year. The number of seets available for this offer is restricted and seats allocated to this offer may be fully booked even though seats are still for sale on that particul IL 4: Maximum stay 2 months. Minimum stay is: 1 Saturday night for Economy Class within ope. S nights for Intercontinental destinations in Economy Class. No minimum stay for Business Class. 5: Tickets must be paid for at time of booking. Minimum of 2 and meanium of 4 pessengers must travel together. 6: No child or Infant discounts are available on these special off lares. 7: Change of reservation – restricted with penalty charges. Name changes, Refunds, Ra-routing – not permitted. 6: Flight prices do not include accommodation, taxes and lees such a all government departure, arrival and security taxes which will vary seconding to countries included in your litherary (e.g. UK taxes to EU countries £10, to other countries £20). 9: A transfer be limited from UK regional airports. Where there is no same day connection, an overnight connection at the passenger's own expense is possible, provided that the total transit time does not exceed 24 hours 10: Existing bookings made on Lutthansa are not eligible and cannot be applied retrospectively to this offer. The Thomas Cook Group Ltd. ABTA 20606. ATQL 0265.

HIFTHANCA WINTER CDECTAL TOVEN

This token entities to	a holder and up to throe other people to travel at the stated concession is these details and present the token to Thomas Cook.	an
Name of token	nolder: Mr/Mrs/Ms/Miss
		_
Postcode	Telephone
	ou travel to GermanyEuropeWorldwide_	_
	Lufthansa Thomas Cook

Iran's leader urged to stand up for human rights

Iran's most outspoken intellectual yesterday warned that clerical opponents of the. country's newly-elected President Mohamed Khatami are determined to overthrow him. In an interview with Robert Fisk in Tehran, Professor Abdol-Karim Soroush criticised the Iranian leader for indecision and urged him to stand up for human rights and academic freedom.

No one knows who dubbed Dr Iran, but when the 52-year-old professor of ethics scuttled Tehran Academy of Philosophy yesterday morning you could almost see him hammering his theses to the heavy wooden door. The clergy, he believes, do not have a God-given right to rule. They are not above criticism. He wants democracy, human rights, academic freedom. Dr Soroush arrived late for our meeting. Only last month, he was prevented from lecturing in Tehran by crowds from the Ansar-e-Hezbollah - the Partisans of the Party of God - who screamed abuse at him before attacking his car. "I managed to escare and later gave my speech over the telephone," be said with just a hint of a nervous smile. "My voice was re-broadcast through loudspeakers. It was quite an innovation. They might even prevent me doing that next time. It was only a 15minute speech. All this showed me that the authorities are not prepared to open our society." Dr Soroush looks an unlikely martyr. A small, bearded man with tinted spectacles and little hair. A graduate of London University, where he studied the philosophy of science; he talks like a machine gun and rarely stops to reload, in a voice that combines passion and frustration in equal measure. He is certain that President Khatami's enemies - the conservative clerics defeated in last May's election who have gathered around Ayatollah Ali Khamanei, the Supreme Leader of the Islamic Republic - are hoping for an outbreak of violence to crush the newly-elected president.

The professor's sin was to question the velayat-e-faqih the "leadership of wise men" that gives Ayatollah Khamanei such enormius though unelected power in Iran - and to have demanded a society based upon rights rather than duties. No wonder he is now banned the courage to print my name," he said. His passport was briefly know if he will be allowed to that solution.

travet to London for an Academy of Arts lecture next year. While the world foudly believes that the liberal and academically distinguished President Khatami - an old personal friend of Dr Soroush - is building a new Iran, the professor displays no such optimism. He observed the vitriolic attacks on Ayatollah Hossein Montazeri - Khatami's electoral supporter who last month dared to accuse Supreme Leader Khamanei of setting up a parallel unetected government - with grave concern.

"Khatami's enemies are very determined to topple him before his term finishes. Some people believe the attacks on Montazeri are directed at the president - in order to prove there can be Soroush the Martin Luther of no security under Khatami's rule. I have nothing caplicitly against the velayat-e-faqih, but through the entrance of the the [religious] men who are in charge should not be above criticism. There is nothing in Islam that prevents us from criticising the highest in the country, whether they be religious or secular," he said.

So will President Khatami

Dr Soroush: Banned from teaching at his university

make a stand against Khamanei and defend his old theological colleague? "Khatami does not want to enter into a conflict with the religious authorities," Dr Soroush replied. "He has avoided debate in order to stabilise his position - which he wants people to see as impartial. The authorities expected him to take action and attack them ... but violence is not in Khatami's interest. Once people are in the street, no one can guarantee there will be no violence."

But the president's pacificity draws Dr Soroush's irritation. if not scorn. "Mr Khatami has to take matters into his own hands ... he has got to allow intellectuals and university men to discuss their ideas about civil society and religion openly otherwise civil society is pointless, " he said.

The professor's point is simple: only an elected government can secure human rights and freedom of expression for Irafrom teaching at his university. nians. To do this, it is necessary No wonder newspapers are no to solve the contradiction crelonger permitted to publish his ated by the late Ayatollah words, "Sometimes they have Khomeini - an Islamic republic which contains both democracy and religious dictatorship. confiscated and he still does not And only Khatami can provide E CONNECTIO 0 MINUTES O E MONTHLY CAL free countctho

ardi Gra mber bac the prov

free monthly cal 00 free line renta 66 FREE ACCESSORM

HOME 0800 0 3865

NΑ

7/CRIME

Mardi Gra bomber back on the prowl

On Saturday the Mardi Gra bomber struck again, leaving a parcel outside a Sainsbury's branch. After il months' dormancy there has now been a pattern of similar attacks in recent weeks. Kate Watson-Smyth tries to uncover the man behind the campaign.

Packages left near Sainsbury's branches in and around London signalled the return of the bomber. On Saturday a shopper escaped unhurt after taking home a device in a plastic carrier bag after visiting the West Ealing branch of Sainsbury's.

leader

up for

to

Police believe the bomb was left at a bus-stop in a Sainsbury's hag, where the 73-year-old woman inadvertently picked it up with her own shopping. It was made of what police called an "improvised shotgun", with the words Mardi Gra on it.

No one knows whether he is a man with a grudge or someone who enjoys pitting his wits against the police, and the resulting notoriety. Since 1994, wheo the first package was left outside a branch of Barclays hury's head office demanded a Bank, there have been periods of activity followed by periods of hibernation.

On 15 November this year ing a shotgun cartridge wired to a springloaded trigger, in a bag of groceries at a Ruislip branch of Sainsbury's. A label offered

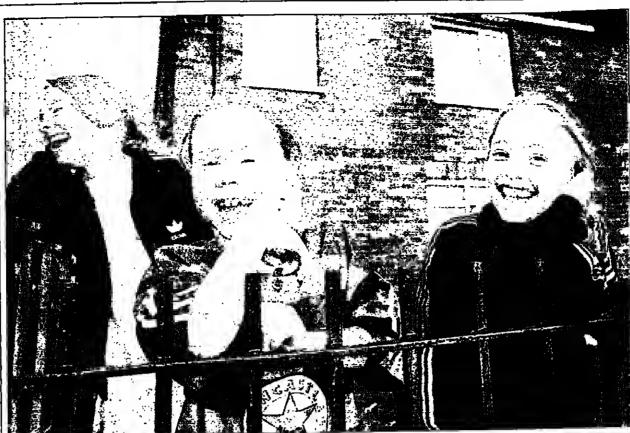

Greenford, On 25 November an exploded device was found near a branch of the supermarket in Chislehurst, Kent and another was taken into the customer-services department of the the Lea Green store and was made safe,

The Mardi Gra bomber moved into public consciousness in December 1994. Six bombs wrapped in Christmas paper and bearing the legend "Welcome to the Mardi Gra Experience" were sent to Barclays Bank hranches, injuring a secretary and a clerk. There followed by a demand for limitless sums of eash that could be drawn using specially created cashpoint cards.

No money was paid and all went quiet. The following May he posted devices; others were delivered by hand, In April 1996 he wrote to the Duily Mail, using the name Mardine Graham, describing Mardi Gra as "Barclays Bank victims who are in the process of reversing the tide of fortune into their favour after a year of activity".

Psychological profiles suggested a man working alone, obsessed, resourceful, intelligent. Police did not rule out a mili tary background.

"considerable amount of money" and said bomhs would be sent to executives or left io stores if it were oot paid. A lethe planted a cassette, contain- ter seot to a paper on 18 Dccember said he was going to target Sainsbury's shoppers. No ooe knows why the homber has started agaio, nor how long £5 to the finder if it was returned it will last this time. One thing to a Sainsbury's store. Two oth-seems certain: it can only be a er devices exploded that day, matter of time before someooc one in Ealing, the other in is seriously injured.

Feeling secure: The Crossley girls (from left) Emma, Holly and Charlene outside their home Photograph: Justin Slee/Guzelian

The simple way to stop burglary

er felt so safe. Their council house is part of an experiment that has defeated hurglars in a neighbourhood with one of the country's worst records for hreak-ins.

The message for the rest of the country is that if domestic crime preventioo measures are followed to the letter then burglary by forced entry can be almost eliminated.

The Crossleys' home is one of about 300 houses that have had laminated windows and steel-framed doors installed as part of a £31m refurbishmeni programme funded by Bradford Council which meets security standards set down by West Yorksbire Police.

After 12 mooths break-ins have almost been eliminated in an area which spans three council estates in Odsal, Brad-

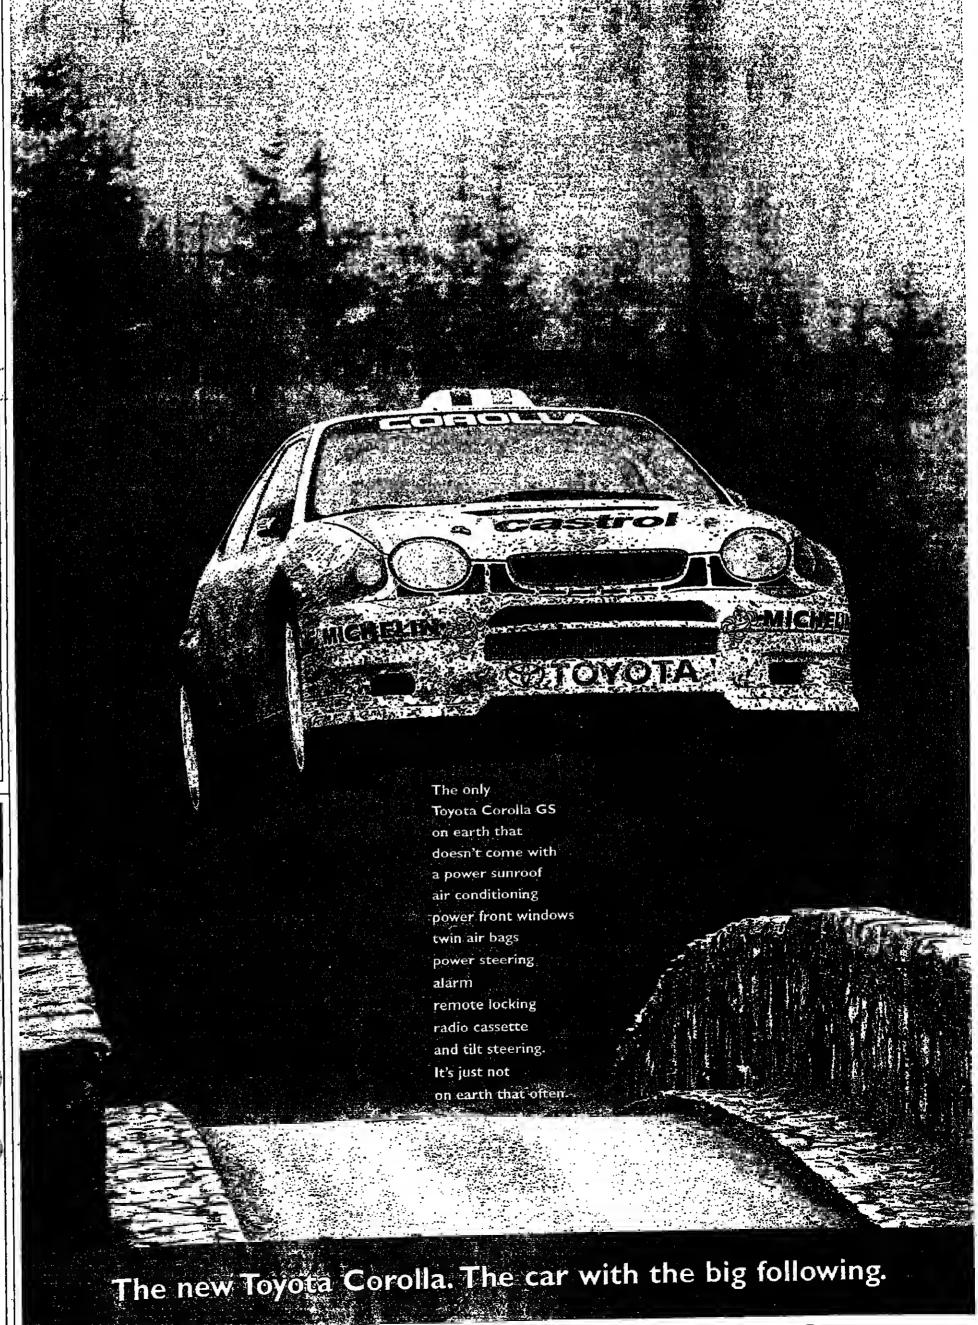

The Crossley family have nev- ford where the rate of hurglaries at the start of the project was one in 15 homes.

"We can leave the house without worrying," said Steve Crossley, a father of four.

I know my wife and children are safe when I leave them alone in the house. My neighbours, especially the older ones. are much happier. They can go out at night ... knowing their homes won't be smashed up. I have been burgled before and it's a dreadful feeling, it robs you of not just a television or video hur your peace of mind." Constable Steve Town, the crime prevention officer who launched the Bradford experiment, persuaded the council to incorporate the police force's domestic security standards and the results are an 82 per cent reduction in hurgiaries. - Esther Leach

SCENES OF DESTRUCTION

PER BILLING

CONNECTION MINUTES OF MONTHLYCALLS FREE CONNECTION FREE MONTHLY CALLS WORLD FREE LINE RENTAL FREE ACCESSORIES

LECCEL SHOWN, TOYOTA COROLLA WORLD RALLY CAR, $296,945 TO FOTA COROLLA 3 DOOR OS FROM $12,660 CALL 2800: 777555 FOR DETAILS THE CAR IN FRONT IS A TOYOTA

: E

New institutions for Northern Ireland may not be in place before the next century, even if agreement is reached in the multi-party talks. David McKittrick, Ireland Correspondent, on a dangerous delay.

Unless both the British Government and Parliament decide them. on a fast-track for the necessary legislation, the new assembly close to the negotiations have isles". told The Independent.

agreement is reached by the mented by institutional links deadline of May next year a potentially dangerous inter- a Belfast assembly but also the regoum would result. A senior party source involved in the talks said yesterday; "This has huge implications for the recreation of conflict. What would people do in the meantime, how would they hold the fort? There would be nowbere for people to engage and maintain momentum.

Under the most optimistic timetable agreement by next May would be followed, fairly promptly, by referendums on both parts of the border. But legislation would not be introduced at Westminster before late next year, and would not pass all its stages before the summer of 1999. The next step would be elections to a new Belfast assembly.

Senior sources say that with a fair wind and goodwill all this could not be accomplished before late 1999, and that delay at any stage means the institutions would not come into being before 2000.

More immediately, two ma-Bertie Ahern, is to visit Stor- methods. mont while on Thursday Ger-Street to meet Tony Blair.

participants are still essentially engaged on "talks about talks" rather than substantive negotiations. The form of contacts has been streamlined, bowever, to a format which the two governments hope will bear fruit by the middle of De-

The new arrangements bring party leaders and their deputies together in one room to compile a list of the main issues and to devise structures for resolving

In the meantime, the parties have been more informally and north-south body may not mulling over a Unionist idea for come into being before late a structure which might be 1999 at the earliest, sources called a "council of the British

The idea is that a new north-This means that even if south body could be compleinvolving not only Dublin and proposed assemblies in Scotland and Wales.

The idea has little instinctive appeal to nationalists, carrying as it does overtones of strengthening Northern Ireland's place in the United Kingdom. Nonetheless, Bertie Ahero has said that the Irish government remains open to innovative approaches and promised to consider it seriously. It may therefore provide a potentially useful starting-point for negotiations between Dublin and the leader of the Ulster Unionists, David Trimble. Talks participants are meanwhile waiting for more information on the killing of a Catholic man shot dead at a Gaelic Athletic Association club in north Belfast on Friday night. The killing has all the appearances of being a sectarian attack by lovalists.

If the death turns out to be the work of one of the mainstream loyalist paramilitary groups, whose political spokesjor attempts will be made this men are represented in the week to sustain momentum in talks, there will obviously be rethe talks and the peace process newed questioning of their generally. Today the Taoiseach. commitment to democratic

Some source suggest, howry Adams and Martin ever, that it may have been car-McGuinness will lead a Sinn ried by the Loyalist Volunteer Fein delegation to Downing Force, a renegade hreakaway group which disapproves of the Within Stormont itself the talks process.

Ploughing on: Protesting Scottish farmers at Stranraer yesterday

Photograph: Peter Macdiarmic

Dover blockade fails as farmers continue protests over beef imports

Farmers continued to gather at British ports yesterday as part of their growing hattle against cheap beef imports.

But their attempt to set up a blockade at Dover failed and five were arrested for obstructing the highway. A spokesman for Kent police said their vehicles had heen impounded.

John Redwood, the Tory trade spokesman, voiced his sympathy for the farmers. The Conservative Party does not condone any illegal action but we quite sympathise with the strong stance the farmers are taking because they have been pushed beyond the limits by a Government which has failed to negotiate anything for them," he said.

them they too would be ar-tle trailers turned round two and we won't my this again." miles from Dover's eastern docks after police warned tle lorry made it to the port entrance, where they were blocked in by a police van.

Hugh Richards, 40, from Biddenden, Kent, condemned the police's "heavy handed tacties" but admitted the hid to halt traffic had failed, "We've About 20 tractors and cat- told our drivers to go home

In Strangaer, Scotland's main Irisb ferry port, nearly 200 farmers gathered and rested if they went any further. hundreds more were expect- at the weekend. Only one tractor and cat- ed overnight.

Jim Walker, a Dumfriessbire farmer, said up to 5.000 farmers and sympathisers had offered to come, but organisers did not want such a large crowd. Peter Rogers, representing farmers in North Wales, said round-the-clock demonstra tions at the port of Holyhead on Anglesey would continue. There was also picketing at the Lancasbire port of Heysham

Kote Watson-Smyth

'Caring Labour' ploy may mollify lone-parent rebels

publicity initiative to launch its Social Exclusion Unit yesterday amid unrest from Labour backbenchers over cuts to lone-parent benefits. Fron Abrams and Ian Burrell examine the tactics Labour is using to deflect attention from the revolt.

The Prime Minister's aides say the timing is n coincidence. But privately they must be hoping MPs planning to vote against the Government over benefit cuts on Wednesday may be mollified by the high-profile launch of the unit.

Tony Blair is not the only member of the Government to boid up the unit as an example of new Labour's caring side. It was conceived in August, when Peter Mandelson, Minister without Portfolio, was running for election to the party's National Executive Committee. He was beaten by Ken Livingstone. But as Mr Blair attends the launch at a South London school today he will be confident of winning Wednesday's vote.

But the Prime Minister may have be feeling uncomfortable after MPs' declarations that they intend defying the party leaders over lone parents. Atsuade them to change their would be in jeopardy.

Downing Street began a minds will doubtless be continuing. Last night lain Duncan Smith, the Conservatives' Shadow Social Security Secretary, said he believed today's launch had been timed to distract attention from problems over the lone-parent issue. "They are trying to somehow shroud next Wednesday in a sort of smokescreen."

taff find store

permarke repare to harge more

tprime tin

المحافظ والصابي

Yesterday some predicted that 25 of the 200 who have been said to feel uncomfortable about the cuts might go into the "no" lobby. Yet more plan to abstain, though they may be hard to distinguish from those gen-uinely called away on other business. The rebels have been told they could be deselected, removed from Commons committees or refused time away from the house if they do not comply. One whip even suggested his own joh was on the line if he was unsuccessful.

None is prepared to talk publicly about the pressure, but The Independent has been given a number of details. Harry Barnes, Labour MP for Derbyshire North West, was threatened with losing his place on the Northern Ireland Select Committee. Whips told him to prolong a trip to the province until the vote was over. This weekend he said it was a "pri-

Alan Simpson, the Nottingham South MP, was also told to stay away. If he did not, a trip tempts by party whips to per- to help South African children

Robinson faces fresh calls to quit over offshore trusts

Geoffrey Rohinson, the Paymaster General, was facing calls for his resignation from Labour backbenchers last night after new revelations about his interests in offshore trusts.

Downing Street is standing by the minister, though, and will today underline its support hy giving him a high-profile role in its new Social Exclusion Unit.

resignation came after Sunday newspaper reports suggested that be had links to a series of offshore trusts set up in the tax suggestion of wrong-doing, Mr haven of Bermuda. Last week he was forced to admit that he stood to benefit from the £12 million Orion Trust, based in Guernsey.

Yesterday's reports said that six years ago he had transferred a personal shareholding thought to be worth around

£380,000 from a £6.4 million Rohinson family firm to the International Trust Company on Bermuda. There were also claims that the Orion Trust bought nearly £3 million of shares in TransTec, the engineering company Mr Rohinson founded, after he joined the government in May 1997.

In total, according to The The calls for Mr Rohinson's Observer, the Orion Trust had bought £12 million of TransTec shares since September 1996.

Although there has been no Rohinson's financial affairs are becoming an increasing emharrassment. Last week he launched the government's Individual Saving Accounts, which limit tax-free savings to £50,000, but was criticised for keeping his own tax to a minimum. Leading article, page 12

Tory defects to Lib-Dems

The Liberal Democrats claimed a new defector from the Conservatives yesterday, taking the number of senior members who years to seven.

lander" stance over the European single currency.

the Shadow Cahinet decided to approach."

oppose British membership of the single currency for 10 years, however much it proves to be in British interests, they wrote the have joined them in recent shortest political suicide note in history. That message signalled Peter Price, an MEP from that the Conservative Party is 1979 until 1994, accused William now under the control of a Hague of taking a "Little Eng- group of ideologically-driven people - just as Lahour was in the early 80s. The ideology is "When William Hague and based on the Little Englander

DAILY POEM

Ambiguous snow

By Norman MacCaig

Snowfalls make no instructions. Silence in a white disguise Happens, without rhetoric Of slumming clouds and slipshod ruindrops.

Posts are mushroomed, roofs are frilled; Light bangs on the sparkling snow-crust; Thin wires balance mountain ranges; Branches break off at the wrist.

Pretty anthiguity, where Great stags sinother, armies founder In a mad pastrycook's mad vision, Pretty in the Christmas candles.

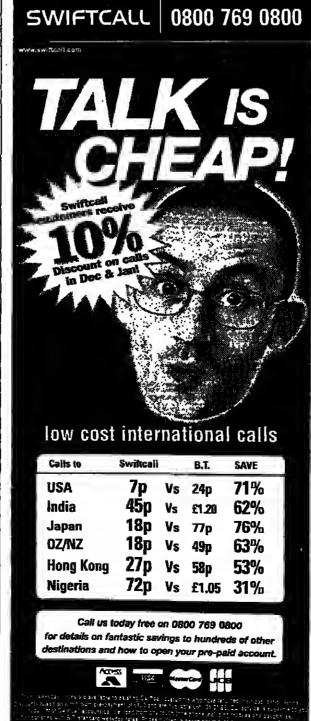

And the word creeps through the snow, Black as pavements green as crocus; And the snuggling bud is warm, And the thrush dies in his feathers.

This week's poems celebrate the Edinburgh poet Norman Mac-Caig, who was horn in the city in 1910 and died there in 1996. They come from his Selected Poems, edited by Douglas Dunn and published by Chatto & Windus [£8.99].

Lemon Grass Soup, Shortbread

ict resolves ro

9/SHOPPING

Staff find store chain's line in flirtation at the check out a turn off

A ration-wide stores group's attempt to exploit the twin obsessions of sex and shopping has affronted some of its employees. Barie Clement, Labour Editor, on one ompany's promotion of titilation' as a sales echnique.

ators to flirt with shoppers to increase sales. "Forget the sweet lure of chocolate at the check-out - what male shoppers really really want is a little titillation," according to management at the Somerfield

At a time of growing awareness of sexual harassment. Usdaw, the shopworkers' union,

A supermarket chain is en- is not amused. In a "survey" couraging its check-out oper- conducted by Somerfield, "amazingly" a third of all men served by "flirtatious check-out agreed they would swap supermarket chains if they could worth over £63hn a year that could mean millions of pounds of extra business per year." management says in a newslet-

two London stores over a twochat up staff. "In a market day period, also found that women wanted to see more 'hnnks' at the check-out."Almost a third admitted to being partial to tasty male check-outs and 29 per cent stated that a quick flirt would be a welcome According to the straw poll, almost half of men would find their trip to the supermarket more enjoyable if they were girls". The survey, conducted in ers were annoyed. In a letter to not be used in this way." the union's journal, Geoffrey Fearn, of the company's Chesterfield shop, wrote that flirt with male shoppers is not name tags to find out their teleonly stupid, but also dangerous.

Shopworkers told their men check-out staff and makes ahuse and frightening teleunion that while some em- them no more than a cheap ployees had found it funny, oth- sales gimmick. People should

A letter from Romaine Moulton, of Tesco's store in Newport, south Wales, said such suggestions put staff in a staff at one store had been subpotentially hazardous situa- jected to a "10-year reign of tertion: "Trying to get women to ror" after a customer had used phone numbers and addresses." It also degrades women and They were subjected to verbal iour could put employees in phone calls. This is the reality of shop work in today's retail environments. Perhaps Somerfield's directors would like to sit on the check-outs and 'flirt' with the customers." John Hannett, deputy general secretary of the union, said he hoped the newsletter was a management "aberration". He argued that flirtatious behav"awkward situations".

A spokesman for the company said presentation of the survey was meant to he "lighthearted" and that the message was that people wanted a friendly and efficient service from staff. "Overwhelmingly customers responded that they were drawn to stores where the check-out staff were chatty and approachable. In no way does this condone any from of sex-

Supermarkets prepare to charge more at prime time

Arlines have done it, eephone companies have done it and now spermarkets are loking into doing it too. Cire Gamer says dual picing, whereby the sane goods or services cot more or less deending on when they an bought, could be the laest weapon wheeled ou in the trolley wars.

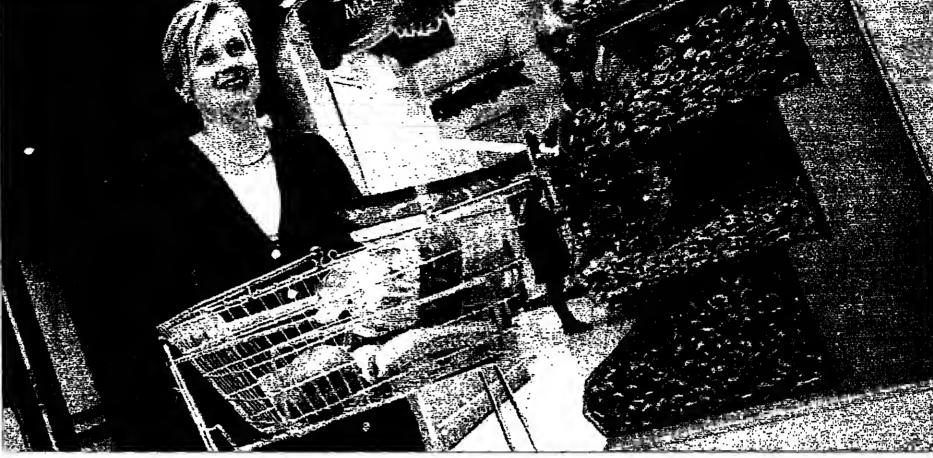

Retil analysts are researching way in which supermarkets anchigh street stores might impletent dual-pricing policies whih would result in rushhow shoppers heing charged mor than day-time shoppers or ideed those who shop throigh the night.

Sich a policy is the latest initiative with which fierce rivals can apture the market share. The fidespread use of loyalty cardineans that the technology is lready available; and analysts say it is the obvious next step to take in the fiercely competitive market. Where once consumers were simply "rewarded" for how much they hought of what, soon their score in points could depend on when they shopped.

By charging more at weekends and in the evenings, for example, retailers might hope to encourage "time-rich, cashpoor" customers such as pensioners and single mothers to do their shopping in quiet weekday periods. This would leave stores less congested at peak times, making way for "cash-rich, time-poor" shoppers, who would he charged more, hut benefit from shorter queues and hetter service.

Early signs of dual pricing are already heing seen at a number of hig chains. Boots the chemists has written to 2 million of its 5 million loyalty cardholders offering them double points if they shop between 6pm and 9pm in the run-up to Christmas.

Trolley wars: Many shoppers could soon find themselves paying more or less for goods and services in retail chains depending on when they shop retail consultancies, is said to be looking at "fair and transparent" differential pricing strategies on behalf of several clients. who wish to remain anonymous. "It is certainly one of the moment," said Matthew Isotta, one of the company's vice-presidents.

Rohert Clark, executive director of Corporate Intelligence on Retailing, another Mercer Management Con- those things that a lot of com- London-based consultancy, sulting, one of Britain's higgest panies are very interested in at said: "Having introduced loyalty cards and generally getting to counts to mothers with babies know more about their inditechnology available to identify when people shop and why they don't shop and when they need to be persuaded to shop."

Safeway already offers disunder 12 months, who tend to vidual customers, they have the shop weekday mornings when stores are less crowded. However, a spokesman "categorically denied" that the scheme heralded dual pricing in the future. "That's a loyalty issue. It's nothing to do with timing," he said. But according to Mr Clark now that most stores have loyalty cards it is back to heing "a level playing field". Inevitably, retailers will respond by trying "all sorts of increasingly sophisticated electronic tricks".

Not surprisingly, consumers jump at the chance to save moncy simply by shopping at a certain time. The experiment has been carried out by B&Q's "Diamond Club", which offers a 10 per cent discount to pensioners who shop on a Wednesday.

Dana-image bears create mayhem as America goes wild for latest vogue toy

A Cheago toy company has found the perfect formula for sending all of America round therend in time for Christmas. It is to take its most popular rane - Beanie Babies - and brig out a special edition model uhonour of Diana, Princess of vales. The inevitable result? Shoping mayhem.

1 ,

Tensure maximum impact - arl maximum nervous-breakdow risk - the company. Ty Inc. is mking the special edition a verylimited one.

lifact, when the Di Bears hit the reets this morning, millions wille disappointed. That is because only 12 will be supplied to ech store that orders them.

Eanic Babies, for the few who may still not know, are smal, squishy fabric toys, about 7imigh and stuffed with small hey have emerged in United tates at least as one of two or hree must-have items on evey parent's Christmas list. Benie Baby mania is striking

he only serious competition

so far coming from Sing and accuse toy companies of delib-Snore Ernie (dressed in his stripy pyjamas, he yawns and says "I'm so sleepy") and from Real Talkin' Buhba.

This is a bear that talks and passes comment in a southern drawl. Best of all, if you hang him upside down by his feet, he will say it all hackwards.

The hysteria prize last year went to the Tickle Me Elmo toy. It was about this time in December, that supplies of Elmo dried up altogether, sending black-market prices though for Beanic Babies in the US is the roof. The crisis led some to erately starving shops of certain toys to stir public frenzy.

Beanie Baby panies occur regularly, because Ty Inc deliberately issues models and, just when their popularity is peaking, retire them again.

Such was the fate of Peanut the Elephant recently. Old Peanuts have been trading over the Internet for more than $2,200 (£1,350), (Recommended price: $4.99).

The Princess Di Baby will be a small bear fitted with a white embroidered rose and a purple satin ribbon. The problem for shops today will be handling demand and preventing violence. "I bet some stores are preparing for a riot," remarked Lola Cardenas, owner of a Chicago card shop. Scores of shop owners have logged on to web sites dedicated to the toys with suggestions on coping with the stampede. Many are getting ready for Diana lotteries, or silent auctions and plan to give the proceeds to local charities.

For some it seems to be getting to be too much. "Actually I prayed about this," one retailer, who is planning a silent auction, confessed "I truly love people and making their dreams come true. It is in giving that we receive and through sales of beanies I have met some great people."

Ty, by the way, will be giving its proceeds from the hears to the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund.

- David Usborne New York

HEWLETT PACKARD

Byte, PC World, Staples, Tempo or John Lewis

Partnership

NCT resolves row over Sainsbury deal

Th National Childbirth Trust. originally voted to accept sponmerbers over sponsorship by Saisbury's, has now changed its mid and decided it cannot, afterili, accept the deal.

ive of the trustees who with has been involved in a sorship have resigned but a for-running dispute between spokeswoman for the charity said their decision was not connected to the about-turn following the row about Sainsbury's own hreast-milk substitute and they they had wanted to leave following "a dif> ficult vear". She insisted there was no dispute hetween NCT and the trustees, who include Ruth Stone, the chair, Jane Langridge, the treasurer, and Janet Neale, the secretary, and said they were still active in their support for the NCT,

The charity sent out a questionnaire about sponsorship to its members after trustees voted to accept sponsorship from Sainsbury's, which sells its own baby-milk substitute.

Although Sainsbury's docs not manufacture the formula, it sells it under its own label which many members felt could he seen as endorsing the store's own-hrand formula and thus compromise the position of a charity which strongly promotes hreastfeeding.

The results of the survey showed the NCT was split down the middle with 43 per cent of the volunteer workers in favour of sponsorship and 46 per cent against. But among those who had had training about breasifeeding the figure was 79 per cent It is believed the trustees of such overwhelming opposi-Earlier this year, 40 breast- cover.

feeding counsellors resigned over the issue and some went on to form a rival organisation, the Breastfeeding Network. It is untikely they will return.

Caroline King, a member of the trust who was against the sponsorship deal, said she was pleased at the change of heart hut saddened at the cost to the

"We have lost a great deal of talent and experience and we are not going to get it back," she said.

"This began because there was a need for more and more money which got out of control and it felt as if we did not care how we got this money as long felt forced to resign in the face as we did get it.

"It has split the NCT in half and I do not know if it will re-Move into another dimensioncreate your own CDs.

Lots of business tools will enhance your performance. The HP SureStore CD-Writer Plus doesn't just do that - it lifts you into another dimension.

Because now you can collect together the elements of multi-media including sound, graphics, video and data, and create a vivid, sophisticated CD that will impress clients and colleagues alike. File transfer is simplicity itself, using drag and drop, whilst CDs are the ideal way to communicate with anyone who has a standard CD-ROM. The HP SureStore CD-Writer Plus is a new generation of re-writable drive. It means you can delete or replace files on CD just like a floppy - in fact it's the equivalent of up to 450 floppies!" HP offers the complete solution with drive, software as well as a hlank HP re-writable CD in the box.

Go for HP SureStore CD-Writer Plus and take a leap ahead. Into another dimension. For your nearest stockist call 0990 474747.

Kyoto is said to be Japan's most beautiful city. But Richard Lloyd Parry says the city now hosting environmental summit is a great world being destroyed by the developers

Kyoto, they say, is the most beautiful city in Japan, but you would never think so to look at it. Arriving here by train, as thousands of people have for this month's summit, is one of the world's great travel disappointments. In front of the station is a choked tarmac plaza of buses and taxis, overshadowed by a hideous tower painted in red and white.

After a day or two, the city's beauties - its temples and old wooden neighbourhoods emerge shyly out of the general clutter. But for much of the time Kyoto is just a wealthy, ugly, chaotically ill-planned city To many Kyoto people, the situation is getting worse. In the past five years, and in the face of strong local opposition, the city administration has aggressively pushed through a series of controversial projects which are changing the look of Kyoto for ever. The climate summit negotiations on global warming have put the situation in ironic focus: a UN environment conference, held in a city whose historical appearance is being swept away by a wave of construction. "Kvoto's traditional environment is being destroyed so quickly," says Shincho Tanaka, chief priest of the ancient Shimyo-in temple.

"The strange look of these buildings, the height of the houses, the pinball parlours and supermarkets. Kyoto is 1,200 years old, but the idea of historical continuity is completely lost on the government."

Three projects have galvanised opposition, although so far the government has refused to give an inch to its opponents. In 1994 the old Kyoto Hotel was replaced with a glasstion, a 60-metre-tall, 200-metreprotests. Now attention is on a with the rest of the world.

third struggle - the battle of the President's Bridge

The story began a year ago at a banquet in Tokyo attended by Kyoto's mayor, Yorikane Matsumoto, and his former Parisian counterpart, the French president, Jacques Chirac. 1998 marks the 40th anniversary of the Paris-Kyoto sister-city relationship and, to mark it. Mr Chirac had a bold suggestion: a replica of the Pont des Arts would be built over Kyoto's equivalent of the Seine, the Kamo river.

Mr Matsumoto enthusiastically announced it on his return. The response of fellow citizens was less warm. "Our first reaction was shock - people thought he must be kidding." says Marc Keane, a landscape gardener and chairman of the International Society to Save Kyoto. "But apart from the dumbness of the idea. there's the complete failure of the city to consult with anyone. Even in Paris, there was eight years of debate before the original Pont des Arts was huilt. Our mayor made up his mind and announced it in three days."

Mr Tanaka said: "These hureaucrats don't appreciate the difference between French culture and Japanese culture. The river is alive ... and we have to respect it ... I don't really want any new hridge, but if there is a new one, it should be a small, pretty wooden bridge, not something like this,"

You don't have to be a Buddhist priest or landscape designer to question the wisdom of the project, and the appropriateness of a French bridge to a traditional Japanese city. The former is an undeniably elegant structure of curving iron arches; the latter are characterised by wood, bamboo and natural materials in delicate and subdued structures. To some, the battle has been lost and one more construction project can do no more to harm an already ruined city. All over Japan, there are links hetween city officials and the construction industry - Kyoto's own construction chief was recently arrested for allegedly accepting and-concrete structure twice bribes in connection with a the original height, ruining the subway line. And beyond the city's low-rise skyline. Then official arrogance, the bridge's there was the new railway sta- opponents see a deeper and longer-term problem - Kyoto's wide ohlong which opened this inferiority complex about its year in defiance of more own culture and its relationship

Bright future: Kyoto children with a globe which expresses hopes for a clean, beautiful planet -10.7C in the 1940s.

How climate takes its toll on Japan

The worst fears of environmentalists are being realised in the very city where the UN is meeting to discuss global warming. Richard Lloyd Parry in Kyoto reports on the toll which climate change is taking on Japan most traditional symbols.

Every autumn, as the maple leaves turn rec the hills around Kyoto catch fire in a hlaz of colours which draws tourists from all over Japan. Travel agencies run maple-letours and maple-leaf weekend hreaks.

The Buddhist temples are crammed with amateur cameramen photographing th most elegant specimens. The leaves are ce ebrated as much for their transience as the beauty - by the end of November, the tree are bare, the paths are swept and the leave float up in the smoke of countless bonfire.

But not this year. As the UN's confe ence on global warming rolls towards its u certain conclusion. Kyoto is obliging environmentalists by experiencing u precedentedly warm weather. Since de gates arrived a week ago, there has been one brief snowfall: for the rest of the time conditions have been almost spring-like with sunshine, clear skies and temperaturs as high as 21C. The autumn colours are still blazing, and the hills around the city hae wide patches of green.

Between 1986 and 1996, according to sttistics gathered by Friends of the Earth, the average December temperature of Kyop was 5.3C to 8.4C, with an average mai mum of 12.9C. This year they have goe as high as 21C: activists have little doubt about the cause. "It's another side of glo al warming," says Tony Juniper, of Friens of the Earth. "When Al Gore arrives bmorrow in his air-conditioned limousi and drives up to his air-conditioned heel for his carefully controlled meeting, I hoe he'll consider the uncontrolled things fat are happening in the outside world."

Whether Kyoto's winter warmth isteally a result of global warming or just a indom weather variation is difficult to prive. But the autumo colours are not the ply Japanese symbol to suffer from rising imperatures. This year the mantle of sno on the volcanic cone of Mt Fuji is thinner han ever and a creeper known as piooeer lant is crawling higher up the mountain, i areas which used to be skiing grounds. "I parted caring for this mouotain around 1$7," said Tei Takagi, a former forestry office who lives near it. "At that time, come Octber and November, the mountain would beovered with about two metres of snow.

Recently, it has been sparse even of the 3,776m summit, where the average emperature has risen to -8.3C, compare with wvic benefits

orld Cup oves draw Colombi
Colombi
nappers

Is the Government's target for greenhouse gas just so much hot air?

The Government says Britain will cut its carbon dioxide pollution by 20 per cent by 2010. In the first of a two-part series, Nicholas Schoon asks if ministers are serious about this target and, if so, how can it be reached?

in the party's manifesto, and has been repeated since the election by Tony Blair. Britain will cut its annual emissions of the main greenhouse gas to 80 per cent of its 1990 level over the

It remains to be seen if this signs up in Kyoto to far more ling climate change.

every family and the workings of most businesses over the next 10 years. Wind turbines would become as common as hightension pylons.

We would have a cleaner the rest of the developed world pollution would reduce sharply, and a more efficient one. Our

In fact, it might make Britain It would change the life of rather more like Japan.

UK emissions have fallen by 5 per cent since 1990, due mainly to changes in the way we generate electricity. The proportion which comes from burning coal has fallen drastitarget survives very long after country, since other kinds of cally. The share of burning natural gas, a fuel which promodest cuts on Wednesday. But cities might he a little more dioxide that coal does for each carbon dioxide. But no new nucut further if gas assumes a higger share of electricity generation, but last week Mr Blair help the coal industry. The trend is for emissions to

It was there in black and white it, and lead the world in tack- only would continue to grow. has that from nuclear power to fly more, drive more, buy which produces virtually no more power-hungry gadgets. Without new policies, UK clear power stations are emissions will be 2 per cent planned and its share will soon higher in 2010 than in 1990, says start falling. Emissions could be the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU), the Government's leading energy advisers.

Falling gas and electricity stepped on the brake to try to hills are encouraging people to consume more energy. Only petrol and diesel prices are raising road fuel duties above dustrial energy taxes - some the rate of inflation.

The next steps are altogether more difficult," said Dr Jim Skea, director of the Economic and Social Research Council's global environmental change programme. "We need a transport, energy, fiscal and technology policy that reflects every chance of creating large climate concerns."

rise with economic growth. As hucking the trend because the hit the target there would have mean for our homes, transpot, the fact is that Britain could do densely packed, and our econ- unit of electricity, has risen. So Britons get wealthier they want Government is committed to 10 be higher household and in- power generation and towns.

thing the Government is loate to contemplate. Some of be money those taxes raise vill have to be redirected igo energy-saving incentives. Sinply taxing fuel more "has litle chance of success", says or David Carless, of ETSU, "ad areas of resentment".

Most experts agree that to • Tomorrow: What the target vill

Christmas !

Chat as long

World Cup

| Japan | Proves draw

| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw | Proves draw
| Japan | Proves draw | Pr

Streeting to discuss sinks when a sing it discuss sinks to discuss to discus Le Change s assing on law Guerrilla warfare ing tens of

* 1: * ar in the

- 750 g

Jane.

"Thanks ever so much for the jumper..."

Boxing Day

"No, really, I do like it, honest..."

New Year's Day January

"So you're sure I don't need a receipt?"

Claws out: Chelsea Clinton holds the First Cat, Socks, while President Bill Clinton fields questions from viewers during a live television show from the White House hosted by the ABC anchorman, Peter Jennings (right)

Move over Socks: the Clintons acquire a First Dog

It's been a bad winter for First Cats. No sooner has Humphrey been booted out of Number 10, than it is revealed that his American opposite number, Socks, will have to share the White House with a DOG. Washington is abuzz with the news that the Clintons have decided on the addition to their household of a three-month old puppy. Said animal, a chocolate-brown labrador-retriever cross, was taken to visit his new owners for their approval last week, spent half an hour undergoing the presidential-compatibility test on the White House lawn, and was then immediately whisked away for training.

as yet unnamed - will allow

The First Dog obedience course, according to the White House, will not - at least in the first instance be about retrieving President Clinton's golf halls, but rather more basic: "like not on the Oval Office rug', said a White House spokesman. The arrival of the dog -

President Clinton to claim his place in a long line of White House dog-owners. His four predecessors all had dogs - George Bush's late lamented spaniel, Millie, was the most recent First Dog. A First Cat was something of a departure. In gossip-ridden Washington views differ about the reasons for the new arrival.

much that they need another focus for their affections. Has Chelsea's departure left Socks without a patron sufficiently powerful to protect his interests?

daughter. Chelsea - now in

Is the President feeling his age to the point where he is giving up jogging for dog-

Or is he so fed up with his

Are the President and Mrs security detail that he is Clinton pining for their considering alternatives? The favoured explanation is that the rarefied her first year at Stanford University in California - so world of Washington politics and Hillary's whistle-stop world tours may finally be getting to him. Much quoted over the weekend has been President Harry Truman's quip: "If you need a friend in Washington, get a dog." Well, he just did.

— Mary Dejevsky

Third bushfire fighter dies

A volunteer fire-fighter died in an Australian hospital yesterday, after he collapsed while extinguishing small fires left after a bushfire to the south of Sydney.

Phil Koperberg, New South Wales Rural Fire Services Commissioner, said yesterday that Peter Edward Estcourt, 20, died 14 hours after being airlifted to hospital. Estcourt was the third volunteer bushfire fighter to lose his life since a series of fires ravaged the NSW region a week ago. - Reuters, Sydney

Israeli union strike

Israel's Histadrut trade union federation was expected to sign an agreement with the Treasury last night which would end Israel's most devastating strike for years. Uncollected garbage has heaped up in the streets and queues formed at bank cashpoint and petrol stations as the general strike, involving some 700,000 workers, slowly closed down the country. Earlier. Amir Peretz, the union leader, said "dramatic progress" had been made after the president of the labour court put forward a compromise. The Histadrut wants the Treasury to honour a pension deal signed with the previous Labour government. - Patrick Cockburn, Jerusalem

Murdoch's dodge

Even though he is an American citizen, the media tycoon Rupert Murdoch pays much less tax than other US magnates in the same field by exploiting opportunities available to a global corporation, which include the use of tax havens. Figures for the past fiscal year, published by the Washington Post, show that his company, News Corp, reported paying $103m (£65m) on operating income of $1,32bn, that is, 7.8 per cent, compared with 28 per cent paid by the Walt Disney Co, and 17 per cent by Time Warner Inc. - Mary Dejevsky, Washington

Truffle wars

Two truffle-hunting dogs were killed by poison in central Italy at the weekend, bringing the total of dogs killed by strychnine since the season began in October to more than 30. The price of the edible fungus has recently soared to around 2.5m lire (£900) per kilo, and police believe someone is seeking to put the opposition out of action.

- Reuters, Perugia

Milosevic benefits from Serbian apathy at the polling booths lustre campaign. But last Tuesday the whole country was made to realise what pathetic, puerile stuff its prospective future frontrunner in September's inconclusive poll and a notorious hardline nationalist, held a live television debate with one of his influential and heavily armed drug cartels, two Marxist guerrilla groups and a batch of rightwing paramilitary organisations.

name used by Medellin cartel boss Pahlo Escobar and his lieutenants in the late-Eightles and early-Nineties to claim responsibility for a campaign of violence. Thousands of people.

including politicians, policemen and journalists, were killed in an attempt to discourage Colombian leaders from beeding US calls for extradition. The campaign worked, until last week, when Colombia agreed to reinstate extradition to the US.

es, Mr Samper's most pressing concern is food and housing for the latest refugees forced from their homes by a war fought by

Marxist guerrillas and right-wing paramilitary groups. After three decades of kidnappings and extortion by guerrillas, the paramilitaries sprang up to wreak revenge and protect rectly. But in recent weeks, the paramilitaries have carried out a string of rural massacres, picking out relatives of guerrillas or peasants they suspect of aiding the Marxists. In the past two weeks gunmen, widely believed to receive support from the Colombian army, have killed 60 people, shooting them in the head in front of their families.

capture of Carlos Castano, the best-known paramilitary leader, of whom President Samper said recently "we will pursue all the

The government has offered

The two sides rarely clash di-landowners.

The kidnappings were the a reward of £500,000 for the whose country is largely run by way to Hell if necessary".

But as Christmas approach-

The Extraditables was the thousands of Colombians

and the president's press

from their homes - spokesman has been kidnapped. Our Latin

Phil Davison reports on the land of England's

America correspondent drug-fuelled violence in World Cup opponents.

William Parra, press secretary and spokesman for Ernesto

Samper, the Colombian President, has become the country's

Mr Parra was abducted, apparently by gunmen in the pay of drug traffickers, as he left the presidential palace last Thursday to watch the World Cup draw on television in which

Colombia was drawn in the same group as England. One of the country's leading reporters.

Lis Eduardo Maldonado of the

RCN radio network, who was with Mr Parra, was also taken.

traditables, previously known to represent the Medellin cocaine cartel, said it was holding the men, apparently to put pressure on President Samper's government not to extradite drug lords

to the United States. The Pres-

Jident issued a weekend state-release of the two men.

ment demanding the immediate latest blow to the beleaguered president, who has been accused of using cocaine cartel cash in his 1994 election campaign, and yesterday, for the second time in apathy suggested little prospect of reaching the 50 per cent turnout

Andrew Gumbel in Belgrade reports

three months. But widespread needed to validate the results.

on an impasse that can only benefit Slobodan Milosevic.

A group calling itself the Ex-latest kidnap victim.

biggest rivals, the crstwhile anti-Milosevic campaigner Vuk Draskovic.

the small screen, surprised everyone by playing the mature politician, doing his best to sound sweetly reasonable about the deleaders were made of. Vojislav Seselj, the pressed economy, the hacklog of unpaid pensions and state salaries, and the thorny political question of autonomy for the Albanian-majority province of Kosovo. But then Mr Draskovic accused Mr At first Mr Seselj, who has a track record high proportion of Croatian blood. Mr have his upponents beaten up, Mr man through and through. But he is also

Serbians voted to elect a president Everybody knew this was going to be a lack of making verbal and physical threats on Seselj looked flustered at first, then threw Draskovic because his claim to represent the same accusation back in Mr Draskovic's face. Since the two men have close family ties, the insults soon became downright perabout the country's future turned into a racist slanging match. The truth is, both men are a severe emburrassment - Mr Seselj because of his ra-the democratic opposition that spent last winter marching against the Milosevic regime looks more tenuous every day. Most sonal. What was supposed to be a debate of the moderates in his party have walked out on him. The rest of the pro-democracy movement are boycotting the election. That leaves just one other leading contender, the Yugoslav Foreign Minister endlessly bland, a poor campaigner and a man with a past as a scourge of antiestablishment intellectuals under Tito.

The most likely scenario is another inquorate election, and another round of voting next spring. Without a president. Serbia cannot form a government. The power vacuum leaves just one man with a real job. Mr Milosevic. Although his post as Yugoslav fed-Sesell of being a bad Serb with a suspiciously bid political opinions and his tendency to Milan Milutinovic, who is a Milosevic eral president is largely honorary, no one is in a position to challenge his supremacy.

Christmas Day December

December

Chat as long as you like over Christmas for just 50p. If auld acquaintance be forgot, then thank heavens for the Cable &

Wireless offer on UK long distance calls. Whether you call Aunt Lorna on Christmas Day, Boxing Day, or New Year's Day, it doesn't matter how long it takes to catch up, it won't cost more than 50p. On these three days (as well as every Saturday and Sunday up to 31 December 1997), every UK long distance call will be charged at the normal rate until it reaches 50p. After that, you can stay on the phone for as long as you like without paying a penny more. This seasonal offer is just one of the many ways we can save you money on your calls every day of the week. So, for a Merry Christmas and a very prosperous New Year, see how much you could save with Cable & Wireless, FreeCall 0500 500 366 quoting RINDCL

What can we do for you?

Including VAT @ 17.5%. Long distance refers to regional and aztional UK calls to non-geographic numbers (including mobiles) and calls made using the Cable & Wireless Calling Card do not quality for this promotion. This offer is only available to SmartCall, UK-Call and LocalCall customers.

Including VAT @ 17.5%. Long distance refers to regional and aztional UK calls. Calls to non-geographic numbers (including mobiles) and calls made using the Cable & Wireless.

EDITOR: ANDREW MARK DEPUTY EDITOR: COLIN HUGHES. ADDRESS: 1 CANADA SQUARE. CANARY WHARF. LONDON EI4 5DL TELEPHONE: 0171 293 2000 OR 017t 345 2000 FAX: 0171 293 2435 OR 0(71-345 2435

Faith and blame

The very rich are different from you and me, as Hemingway pointed out, because they have more money. And because they have more money, they employ accountants who will draw up trust deeds, advise on tax efficiency and put large amounts nf it io Guernsey, Jersey or Bermuda.

It should come as no surprise, then, that Geoffrey Robinson, the Treasury minister, should benefit from a Guernsey trust fund. Or that, wheo the story of his family finances is followed through public records it should lead in Bermuda trusts apparently named after his nieces. Mr Robinson is a multi-millionaire, possibly worth more than £30m, a businessman before - and especially since - he became an MP. He was also left a lot of money by a Belgian former busioess associate of his, the satisfyingly named Mme Bourgeois, which was the origin of the Guernsey trust.

These are interesting arrangements, in the sense that the private lives of the very rich are bound in appear exotic in the rest of us, although they in no way justify the extravagant attentions of yesterday's newspapers. There is nothing improper about the way his affairs are organised, and Mr Rohinson appears to have followed scrupulously the rules for ministers in respect of his private finances.

And yet ... There is something faintly alarming about the arrival in power of an aggressively pro-husiness Labour Party so blissfully unaware of the dangers of being hoist by the petards which it used with such relish in opposition.

Tony Blair's glee that the chairman of BP had agreed to serve in a Lahour government Jed him to overlook the minor detail of Lord Simon's £2m shareholding. Lord Simon could oot sell it, because he might be accused of profiting from inside knowledge about BP's prospects. So he kept it, but no hright-eyed civil servant pointed nut that he was just as likely to be accused of profiting from inside knowledge by hanging on to it. Not only that. he now also risked compromising his ministerial judgement. Nor did it help that a quarter of the shares were held for him by BP in a Jersey trust, presumably in order to reduce either his or BP's tax hill.

Tax avoidance is the tricky concept at the heart of the present issue. There is a clear moral distinction to be drawn between avoidance and evasum, and most taxpayers try not to pay more tax than they have to. For most, the mechanics are simple, such as claiming tax relief on mortgage payments or pension contributions. But for the very rich it is worthwhile to use tax havens and trusts. It is not ideal that most of the economic activity in parts of the United Kingdom and its dependencies should simply consist of the reduction of rich people's tax liability. There is a case for saying these places should either be part of the UK paying taxes and represented in Parliament or they should be independent, but in practice it makes sense that they should remain half in and half out, within reach of British law.

Equally, it would be oppressive to legislate against trusts. The discretionary trust is a dodge: the claim of avoidance rather than evasion contains an element of disingenuity. Legally, the trustees have discretion over to whom they hand out the money; in practice, they give it to the person they first thought of. But you cannot tax intentions. Nor, in the case of Mr Robinson, can he do anything about the constitution of the trust fund set up for him by Mme Bourgeois.

The fuo really started when Mr Rohinson announced changes to Tessas and Peps, the tax-avoidance devices of the middle classes. He was denounced as a hypocrite for capping tax-exempt savings at £50,000 and seeking to spread the subsidy to poorer people who could not afford to pul money away for five years. But this is just the eye-of-the-needle fallacy: that rich people cannot favour redistribution, or that iodividual rich ministers cannot sponsor measures which favour the poor. The trouhle is that it is a fallacy that has been encouraged, indirectly, by the Government itself. On the one band, it has harnessed the skills of some talented people who have, unsurprisingly, used those talents in the private sector to amass piles of money. On the other, it has presented itself as ushering in the dawn of a "new politics", in which the highest possible standards of conduct in public life will be observed.

This is compounded by an emphasis on presentation and surface perceptions. If Gordon Brown thinks that Princes William and Harry should pay £7m inheritance tax on Diana's estate because it would look had to try legally to avoid doing so, then logically he and his ministers should adopt 3 Gandhian moral posture and Mr Rohinson should hand over all his worldly wealth, either to the Treasury or to cancer charities. Perhaps it is time for the Government to seize the slightly more realistic mural ground.

Post letters to Letters to the Editor and include a daytime telephone number. Fax 0171 293 2056; e-mail: letters@independent.co.uk E-mail correspondents are asked to give a postal address. Letters may be edited for length and clarity.

LETTERS

Rich world's pollution and cultural prejudices that Sir: Sue Birley (letter, 2 Delead to this blind support for Iscember) draws attention to the rael, why does the West go on relationship between populasupporting the fundamentalist tion and total carboo dioxide state of Saudi Arabia? It is true emissions of developed counthat Saudi Arahia has lots of oil tries. From a global point of and so the West has nurtured view, the country with the most it as one of its closest allies, but alarmingly high population and what about its support of the growth rate is not any develdreaded "fundamentalists". oping country like China or India, but the USA. Americans which the Western media keeps are responsible for far more fos-Clearly the rise of Muslim sil fuel consumption per head than any other people, aod fundamentalism has nothing to do with the holy city of their population is continuing grow rapidly.

Mecca or the Quran - it has much more to do with the in-Internationally, one of the equalities and injustices of the most widely acceptable formumodern world which values oil lae for allocating C02 emission more than human and culturreductions between the naal relationships, and that is tions of the world, is to allow bell-bent on settling old hiseach country a C02 quota per torical scores. A powerful and existing head of population. manipulative West has failed to The poorest countries, having understand the consequences of a low present use of fossil fudecades of frustration among els, would not have to cut back the powerless Muslim masses so much, and the poorest could even expand. The rich countries Dr MOHAMMED IOBAL would he the ones that had to make cuts - the very ones with the capacity and technology to do so. But this approach would also hring home to everyooe the relationship hetween total numbers and wealth. The rich countries would discover that it is they, and oot the Third World, that are the truly overpopulated ones.

CHRISTOPHER PADLEY Market Rasen, Lincolnshire

Opera's silence

Sir: So the first act of the Royal Opera House drama has ended. Lord Chadlington has resigned, the Board has fallen on its collective sword and Mary Allen soldiers oo, supported, we learn, by the senior management and artistic direction of the House. But surely the artistic directors should be taking a close look at their own record. They must be responsible for at least some of the overspending and it was their artistic judgement which selected programmes and productions which played to part-empty houses at The Barbican, Labatt's Apollo and The Shaftsbury, despite widespread publicity and savage cuts in ticket prices. JUDITH CRUIKSHANK

Lone parent's plea

Sir: I urge your readers to consider the following points and to lobby Parliament against the proposal to abolish lone parent beoefits on 10 Decem-1. Lone parents are are embarked on years of unpaid and often isolating and demoralising work in bringing up children on their own. This work is done also on behalf of the absent parent. One person carries the responsibility and struggle where once there were two. 2. This marginalised group, in most cases, of women and children are living already on the breadline according to the Government's own analysis. This is supported by both statutory and voluntary organisations concerned with child poverty. and family health and welfare. 3. Why are working women discriminated against by the CSA? When will child care costs be included in the maintenance payments of the absent parent?

4. There will be a strong disincentive to work after April, as new claimant parents will be significantly worse off if they find themselves unemployed, their child care falls through, or they can't do the juggling set of heing superwoman/man at home and in the market place.

5. Why are parents with underschool-age children being peoalised with henefit xuts? 6. Where is this plethora of affordable or free child care provision? Why not wait and see if it materialises first" Current research on the success of the Welfare back to Work scheme have beenvery disappointing. 7. Instead of being so punitive why doesn't the Government congratulate lone parents for having the sense of responsihility for staying with their children in the first place, and the courage and stamina to carry on despite the abuse that is poured upon them.

SUSAN TWYMAN Lewes, East Sussex

A bone to pick

Sir: Mark Evans (letter, 6 December) asked how the Government could continue to allow sales of cigarettes while preventing the sale of beef on the bone, when the risk of death from the former far exceeds the risk from the latter.

I for one would be perfectly happy to see beef on the bone for sale in shops if it carried a government health warning like cigarettes do. This seems far more sensible than an outright han every time the Government uncovers some potential hazard, whether it be from beef, chicken, eggs, apples. or genetically aftered soya. RICHARD BARTLE West Bergholt, Essex children to scholars, to enrich the cultural heritage of this country. A F SEAGER

Emerilus Reader in Mineralogy, University of London Egham, Surrey

Sir. The proposed introduction of admission charges to our national museums and galleries is a pernicious idea and must be vigorously resisted.

It can't be denied that the imposition of admission fces will inevitably prevent the least well off in society benefiting from and enjoying our rich national collections. As a Londoner growing up in Brixtoo with very limited resources. my only exposure to "high culture" was from visits to the Tate Gallery, National Gallery and the British Museum. These visits greatly enriched my life and nurtured my passion for the visual arts. However, had there heen admission charges, that would not have been possible.

The introduction of admission charges would, at a stroke, make art exclusive. For many people - and there are thousands of them - day-to-day life is a struggle. How on earth can a Labour government justify such a parsimonious attitude towards our great national collections, while at the same time defending, without hesitation, spending £400-plus million on the Millennium Dome, a scheme with very limited life expectancy and which does not enjoy widespread popular support. KEVIN DRISCOLL

Fire without smoke

London

Sir: After reading the article (Saturday, 6 December) on whether papers should he reeveled or hurnt. I think recycling is the only option for The Independent.

With a Scottish nanny in the household we have both the Daily Record and The Independent cach day.

When starting an open coal fire with the Daily Record the fire always starts with ease. When using The Independent the lire takes considerable coaxing to burn.

il, like men, ca

What does this say about the properties of The Independent compared to other papers? My wife thinks nothing burns like

ANDREW COLLINS Guildford, Surrey

The Vindaloo Vic shows the art of arts sponsorship and the Arabs? Even if one tries to understand the historical on going on about?

in the Middle East.

Brailford, West Yorkshire

KINGTON

Today - a business story for our times! A brand-new yarn entitled "The Person You Have Rung Knows You Are Calling". Yes, it's a rip-roaring tate of gritty Northern knowhow, and cut-throat arts sponsorship!

Once upon a time there was a struggling drama group which believed that it could really go places if only it could get some "Money!" said Mickey, the group manager. "We need money! With money we could go places! "And even if we didn't go places, we could at least get out of Yorkshire." "We all joined this group to alter it!" get away from the money jungle." said Sheila, the director. "Now we're even more worried about it than ever. Look at the Royal Opera House! They're millions of pounds in debt! Does it worry them?"

"They've got sponsorship." said Doug morosely. Doug was the member of the group who said things morosely. There's always one.

"In fact, things have got so bad at the Royal Opera House you almost expect things to be reversed, and the Opera House start endorsing hanks. 'Hi there - we're the Royal Opera House, and we've got the biggest overdraft of all time, so naturally we're glad that Barclays Bank is looking

The thought was so depressing that Doug felt momentarily cheered.

"We haven't got a whisper of sponsorship," said Mickey, "and we're oot likely to." "Not true," said Phoebe, the actress. "We got the Balti House to sponsor us. Remember? In Arnold Wesker's The Kitchen?

It was true. The local Balti House had indeed sponsored them, but only to the extent of supplying the food. The takeaways had turned up 10 minutes before curtain up and the actors had tucked in voraclously on stage as they performed. It was their evening meal, after all.

"Do you remember how involved Mr Balti gol?" said Sheila. "He really lived being around the theatre. Given half a chance he would have acted in the play...

"That's a great idea!" said Mickey. "You might be on to something here!"

"Sorry?" said Sheila. It's always depressing when you say something intelligent without realising that you have.

"Well, when a theatre group approaches a firm for funding. it just sounds like hegging. Give us your money and we'll put your name in the programme ... It's not much of an incentive, is it?

"The theatre group never offers anything in return. Wouldn't it be nice to go to the hig boss of the firm and offer him something nice in return

"What can we offer?" said Phoche. "A part in the play." said

Mickey. "A what?" said Doug morosely hut very loudly.

"I would be willing to wager," said Mickey, "that one in to businessmen has a secret urge in go on stage. Find the right one, and we have a deal. He gets a small part and the chance in fulfil a secret dream we get the money!"

Mickey felt no confidence when he said this. But he was wrong. After knocking on the doors of eight local firms he found Roger Dunstahle, the managing director of a husiness which specialised in laying pipelines in difficult terrain and through difficult planning regulations. Roger Dunstable was known to be hot stuff when it came to laying pipelines. What none of his colleagues knew was that he had always wanted to go on stage, "What play would you offer me a part in?" said Roger, making sure the drair was closed and nobody could hear. "I would only want

Museum charges

Sir: At the age of 14 I hecame fascinated by minerals. On a free day I would arrive at the gates of the British Museum

[Natural History), as it was called in those days, before opening time, with a textbook and notehook and study till closing time, thus learning a great deal before going to uni-

Later, I took my students to the Mineral Gallery to teach them, using this world class collection.

Seven of my students are or were members of staff of that department, one reaching the Mine is the story of one individual, whose life has been very greatly enriched by free access to this wonderful mineral collection. We shall never know how many fail to reap similar benefits, due to the introduction of admission charges. 1

make an earnest plea for free entry to the Natural History

Museum and other museums

for all people, from school rank of Keeper.

Well," said Mickey, "for our first production next year we're going to kick off with a thriller, for which we need a corpse."

a very small part."

"A corpse?" said Roger. You want someone just to lie there? You want my firm to hand over hundreds of pounds ... " "Thousands of pounds," said Mickey.

.. thousands of pounds, and in return I have Yuu Are Calling"!

to lie dead on a stage ?"

"Oh, no," said Mickey hastily, "You get things to say first! You have a little scene with the leading lady. You say two very funny things. Then you get shot. It's a great cameo role! And if you want, you could change and come on in the second act as a press photographer."

Ruger thought. It was a ludierons idea. On the other haitd, he would never get a chance like this again. Done," he said.

How will the managing director of a pipeline firm make out in his first attempt to be a enrpse? Find out tomorrow in the concluding episode of "The Person You Have Rung Knows

REDWOOD CUT AND THRUST FOR DEMOCRACY

Liberals and Labour campaigned as two separate parties in the May cleetion - nn discussinn of coalition or even a shared agenda. In some places the sparks flew.

We were all misled. Since the election the two of them have cosied up, getting claser and claser, even thnugh Tony Blair's majority is so big he has no conceivable need of Paddy's minions.

What's the plot? Most governments come to office with a hig idea (even if it eventually becomes mere survival). Before the May election we were told Labour's was to make a difference, to make things better. We now know the real big idea was in the closet during the election. It turns out to be nothing less than refashioning the British constitution to remove confrontational politics for ever.

The Liberals have long held that the higgest defect of British politics is passion. They don't like argument. They see heated exchanges across the floor, sharp questioning, the cut and thrust of party politicking across the chamber of the House of Commons as problems. They have long sought round tables to replace that square table dividing two sides, preferring consensus to decision, compromise to principle.

Now we have a government which thinks the same way.

Labour has come nut for PR hut why does it want to change a system from which it has done so well? The Prime Minister has to let us into his thinking - especially since proportional representation was hardly a central feature of Labour's general election pitch. Is it that he thinks the 20th century was disfigured by too many Conservative administrations, some of which (like his government) were elected on a minority of the vote? His alliance with the Liberals is intended to find a way nf counting votes that would prevent another Conservative majority in all but the higgest of landslide years. He is - we surmise seeking the clixir of permanent power but fiddling with the system. rather than mastering the art of perpetual popularity.

He brings in sight the death of many of the salient characteristics of our democracy. Parliament is all the hence for being angry, funny, spontaneous, personal, cutting, even unkind. It is a test of mettle and men. and of the persuasiveness of policy. If you can convince Parliament, in the teeth of strong opposition, then you have a good chance of convincing the nation.

Our system thrives on uncertainties. At nn point during the 18 years of Conservative rule could we he sure we would win again. At no point - under present rules - can Mr Blair relax knowing he is guaranteed another term, whalever the current size of his majority. If you alter the voting system much of that uncertainty is removed.

Parliament would be insipid if we had to try to agree all the while. The nation would sonn feel bored and cheated. Some say Prime Minister's Questions are too boisterous and noisy. Yet any constituent coming to Parliament wants tickets for precisely that confrontation between the hig men, not far some worthy debate. Television does not want to follow politicians chanting accord in words so loose and empty they permit consent by all.

I read occasinnally that Tony Blair is not keen on new voting systems. Sources say that he shares popular scepticism about PR. This is hard to believe. He is powerful; he heads the government. If he can single-handedly overturn a manifesto promise on tubacco sponsorship, it is hard to believe he would allow PR for Wales, Scotland and the European Parliament if he was against it.

We have to treat his enthusiasm for PR seriously. He has appointed Lord Jenkins, who is a staunch campaigner for the abolition of first-pastthe-post elections. Lord Jenkins's "inquiry" is neither independent nor academic. Had the Prime Minister been genuinely undecided, he would have appointed a High Court judge or someone of no known view or affiliation in order to carry out an impartial review,

Labour delights in saving it embodies the new consensus as it pushes through devolution, PR, the introduction of the European Convention on Human Rights and so on.

But I have no wish tn join Mr Blair's new consensus, if indeed it is one. It is our jnh, the job of William Hague and his team, to expose Lib-Lah policies when we think them secretive and wrong or muddled. (For example, in showing how Mr Blair told the nation only half the story when before the election he said he wanted a different relationship with Europe and devolved government in the regions.) The government of this country will be the better for that disclosure.

What he really meant - we can now see – was removing substantia responsibility from our government and accountability to our Parliament to "independent" quangos and secret meetings of the Council of Ministers.

His new model dispenses with Parliament and its role of demanding from ministers that they account for their actions. PR is his magic ingredient: the project is nothing less than to abolish opposition. Lib-Lah success would make a mighty dent in our democracy.

Wanted: a Department for Banging Heads Together

POLLY TOYNBEE NEW UNIT. OLD PROBLEMS

Today Tony Blair launches his Social Exclusion Unit from a school in the heart of Lambeth. Expect an inspirational speech pledging himself again to the cause of the poor. Again he will ask his government to be judged by its success in bringing them back into the mainstream.

There's been a fair amount of cynicism about this enterprise. Is it just another talking shop, more policy wonkery? Just another fizzing initiative, that fizzles out before inng? Yet annther layer of bureaucracy? Where, muttered one Labour MP, does cutting the work incentives for very poor new single parents fit this grand scenario?

However, this is the key Big Idea. It is the rock on which all the other fine schemes and good intentions will stand or founder. Welfare to Work, New Deal, all of it depends for long-term success on this unit - because this is the Department for Banging Heads Together. Many have tried it, many have failed. (Some may remember something called Jasp - the Joint Approach to Social Policy?) But that doesn't mean it isn't worth trying again and again.

Headed by the Prime Minister. run from Downing Street under his authority, it brings together eight senior ministers. Its committee includes six senior civil servants and six experts from prohation, social services, charities, church and police. Their role is to co-ordinate across the nightmarish boundaries that divide departmental budgets at the top and often destroy the gond that happens on the ground.

The unit has no hudget, delibcrately. They considered whether to hid for funds and decided against it, fearing all their energy would he spent on setting up projects instead of making the natinn's administration work - far more difficult, far less fun, but far more important. The problem is not a shortage of wonderful schemes on the ground. There are plenty of social entrepreneurs and local authority-run schemes that work very well. The unit's task is to co-ordinate all that, replicate the best, ensure the money flows into what works and, most important of all, to make all these organisations work in long-term partnerships.

What's actually happening? Dis-This is dull administrative stuff, not headline-grabbing new aster and chaos all over the place.

wheezes, But consider what is Under the shadow of The Indenendent's offices in Canary Wharf. happening on the ground right now, and you will have some idea Tower Hamlets council, one of of the problems they have to solve. the basket-case local authorities, is Take just one problem which warslashing its hudgets. Many others ring parts of the state are tackling around the country are doing likein different ways - dysfunctional wise. In a very barsh year for local families with young children where authorities, social services almost everything goes wrong. everywhere are squeezed to the bone. Looking just at family pro-Jack Straw at the Home Office has his own Parenting Initiative. jects, many are closing, others are

The NHS funds projects for mothbeing cut right back. Often the first ers and children, being legally reto go are the best, run by charities. sponsible for child protection and Newpin, in Bethnal Green, is just one example. Although it has health visitors. The Education Department is struggling with imposrecently had a glowing evaluation sible young children who arrive at report, exceeding its targets by 20 school unfit to learn, and the risper cent this year, it is to close. ing tide of school exclusions. Police, Each year it takes in some 80 procourts and probation try to deal foundly depressed mothers who are with very young criminals, catching not coping with their children. a very few at huge expense, doing gives them a hefriender and offers nothing about prevention. The intensive support. They teach mothers who have never been Environment Department oversees local authorities and social sermothered themselves how to play and talk to their children, visiting vices, responsible for rescuing families from the brink and for chilthem at home, hringing in the isodren in care. Meanwhile charities who run some of the best family feet. Mnst of the co-ordinators are projects dissipate their energy mothers who have been through struggling to put together money the programme and turn into befrienders of others, passive victims All these agencies approach the becoming active supporters. same family from a very different However, suddenly, with no notice, the East London Health Authority, also in deep financial trouble, has withdrawn its £30.000 funding. As a result, Tower Hamtask to make them all work together - very difficult indeed. Partlets council, looking for £6m cuts. nership is the key word - making is seizing the opportunity to withdraw its half of the money. No one wants to make the cuts - but it's not a statutory service so it's the Newham are under threat for the same reasons. Other children's charities running family centres dealing with the same problems are also closing, NCH Action for Children has lost its funding from Hammersmitb and Fulham for its Askham Family Centre, and three others in Oxfordshire. I could list plenty more. Save the Children is now withdrawing its family centres, partly because local authorities were withdrawing money. Like all charities, it isn't willing to fund what local authorities themselves should do: its role is to offer added val-first to go. Newpin in Sheffield and

uc. Partnerships everywhere are breaking down. What can the Social Exclusion Unit do? Knock heads together, All these government departments bave a strong interest in helping calamitous families at the earliest stage. If they don't, these families will cost social services, schools, police, prisons and the NHS a vast forget money out of what isn't working, into what does? The trouble is, the Treasury can't count the future money saved. That's why it will take prime ministerial muscle to decree, say, that family centres that are proven to work will be funded jointly out of all those budgets, by hook or by crook.

And family centres are just one example. In every other field it's the same story. The unit is starting work on school exclusions, street homelessness and the worst council estates, But whatever it lahels the problem, it's always inextricably linked with everything else. Pull one thread and it all unravels.

The question is whether, for the first time ever, they can knit it all together? Has the Prime Minister the time to give it? Only his power can force it to work. Dare he take money from the police, courts and prisons - which don't work - to fund prevention where the future outcomes will never be easily quantitiable? Can it be done without hridging money? How do you seize control back from useless local authorities who deliver most of these services, while still talking devolution? Some sceptical old heads give ple of left and right have identified this problem time and again, and failed to solve it. But that is why you need a new government and new clever people, to see if they can do any better this time.

Photograph: Andrew Buumlar

Women, like men, can help acting on impulse

DAVID WALKER BEHAVING BADLY IN BASILDON "It's not like dealing with a hardened — a hirth have entertained horror fancriminal," a member of the Essex Constabulary was reported as saying as news hruke of the arrest of Denise Giddings over the abduction from a Basildon hospital of new-born Karli Hawthorne.

Welt, no. it's not, especially since under English law suspects are still (just about) merely that and are not guilty - and hence to be considered criminal - until a court of law finds

But we get the officer's point. This is one of those cases where even the bench's hard men have to admit "responsibility" is not a straightforward matter. Here is a tale of a simulated pregnancy, a cot and toys bought in advance. But by accepting the pathos do we open the door to accepting there is such a thing as crime passionnel or. in its latter-day variants, hormonal or Darwinian crime - a class of offences in which the perpetrator can honestly plead, "it wasn't me, guy"?

Child abduction touches nerveends deep in the cultural cortex. This is the ultimate community crime, the one which defined Jewish sin (in Christian eyes) in the Middle Ages. History's stock of myth and folk tales is riddled with child stealing and substitution, from the banks of the Nile (Moses) to those of the Weser (class) action by Hamelin's piper, touching the even deeper parental fear that children might actually want to leave). Fear persists into the neon-lit late 20th century. Most of those who have waited in hospital corridors for tasics about mis-identification and loss it is only when your son starts to walk like his grandfather you have complete genetic confirmation.

This is why the Basildon story makes such good copy - which Karli's father, the unimaginative (at least in the names department) Karl Hawthorne promptly realised as he opened the sealed bids from the papers for his account of events. And of course behind it all may lie a phenomenon which is still pretty much a medical also-ran, miscarriage. Despite the propagandising efforts of such specialists as Lesley Regarrat St Mary's Hospital and a couple of indefatigable interest groups, the physiological causes of spontaneous abortion are little known, let alone its psychological dimension - why, for example, some women hate the association of that word, abortion, and its implication of choice, with the randomness and wastefulness of what has happened inside them.

Miscarriage's Cinderella status is odd since it is a mass phenomenon. A fifth of all putative pregnancies that go to term end prematurely: it is an accident famous actresses are unashamed in acknowledge. Yet women's reactions to miscarriage are richly diverse. For some, feelings of loss and bereavement are real; for others, it registers no more heavily than 100 other physical passages. In a small number of women, reaction does seem to take extreme forms. For a grummed + for example, sometimes dead child is fulfilled by the theft of some other's living offspring.

from all these sources.

point of view, using different budgets with different objectives. It will be the Social Exclusion Unit's

it happen is something else.

But here we need to tread very carefully. Society - men, many women, too - is hopelessly confused in the way it models women's "nature". Sex machines one minute. breeding machines the next and in between corporate high-achievers all.

It is not just the facile generalisation that says "all women are ...", for example, Mandy Allwoods at heart. It is the anthropological arrogance that says there is an identifiable structure 10 women's behaviour. History is litnered with examples of priests and politicians and paediatricians who believe they know what nature's programme is for women, and it generally involves a fair degree of standing around in nurseries and kitchens. Perhaps it was the death of Diana, Princess of Wales. This autumn we seem in have heard a lot about a meteurological or tidal model of female nature: women are oceanic spaces through which course great waves ... of emotion, of chemicals, of connectivity. It is a model which feeds off the new irrationalism - that strain of post-modern thought, increasingly common at the century's end - that condemns the Enlightenment and all its work, especially reason. Women - opines Steven Pinker. nf the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the latest neo-Darwinian to hit the bookstalls - know not what they do. They are culturally prohandful, it seems a wish to replace the — to leave their own new-born children to die. Such women are not mad or bad. They are obeying "unconscious" primitive instincts; only as children age do mothers recognise the increasing "biological value" of a child. Women - conventional wisdom was husy with this interpretation yesterday - sometimes cannot help acting as they do because Nature/their genes/hormones/maternal destiny requires them to do things. The obvious response to all this is that if genes determine women s behaviour why do they not equally cause men to behave as they do. And down that road lies the excuse Martin Clunes and his lik are just longing for: it is a recipe for barbarism. Of course behaviour is shaped and limited by physiology and genetic endowment and of course there are gender differences in both. But 10 leap from there to causation and start saying women and men have no choice is to tohoggan down a philosophical Cresta Run.

We have to hope Dunise Giddings gets a fair trial. That must mean one in which it is recognised that all our lives are a series of balances and compromises between biology, will and culture. But the greatest of the three has to be will, the capacity to choose.

A women who miscurries may suffer badly. She may need and deserve a lot more support than she may get from partner or family and especially from GPs whose training in dealing with women is still so inadequate. None the less the fact of her pain and loss can never be allowed to deny she had a choice in how she then behaved, Clueless this Christmas?

HELP IS AT HAND

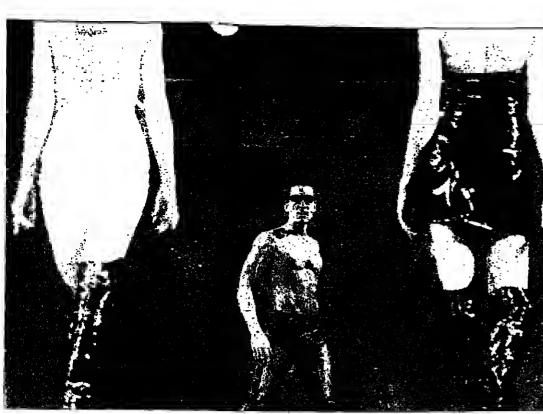

Read our Christmas Gift Guide on Friday 12 December to help you decide what you'll be giving this Christmas.

PUBLISHED IN THE EYE ON FRIDAY 12 DECEMBER

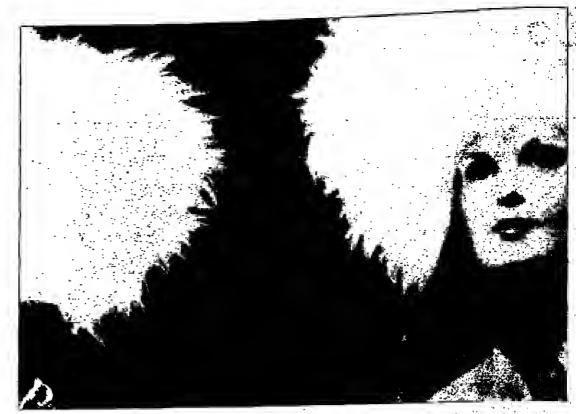

IN ASSOCIATION WITH

Runners up in The Independent/Clothes Show Live Young Catwalk Photographer of the Year, Paul Gadd, left, and Christine Coombes, right, are both from the Swansea Institute of Higher Education. Paul Gadd's shot sums up perfectly the mix of fashion, glamour and beefcake that combine to make the crowd scream. Christine Coombes chose to pick out the texture of fluffy fake fur hats by Herald and Heart Hatters. recommended for its artful composition

ord, what i

'Don't shoot till you see the whites of their eyes'

As Clothes Show Live opened its doors on Friday, five young finalists for The Independent's young catwalk photographer of the year competition flexed their lenses. Tamsin Blanchard helped choose a winner.

"Lights, Music. Three minutes to go, Testing, testing. Five, four, three, two, one. Action. Welcome to Clothes Show Live 1997." It is 11.15 on Friday morning and five young photographers are about to make their catwalk debut. The finalists for The Independent/Clothes Show Live young catwalk photographer of the year are elbowing their way into the fray around the catwalk for the first show of the week, They are nervous. A representative from Fuji has supplied each of them with the long lens necessary for professional catwalk photography. Chris Moore, the veteran catwalk some last-minute advice. "Don't shoot till you see the whites of their eyes," he says. The music, dance and fashion extravaganza explodes into lowing onto the catwalk the atmosphere of Clothes Show footsteps when he assists the Inphotographers can barely see the Live. "The kids save up for dependent's catwalk photograph-45 minutes to shoot five rolls of film and produce three strong among the 400 showing at the ex-ceived £200 worth of Fuji film. images that would make an In- hibition include Betty Jackson. dependent reader stop and look photographer and competition

judge who has been snapping shows since the Sixties, offers as they turn the page.

show. Instead of rows of stonyfaced fashion editors dressed in serious black, jotting down notes and sketches in their Smythson fashion diaries, the Fashion Theatre at Birmingham's NEC has the atmosphere of a pop concert. The audience screams, whoops and gasps at the clothes, a mixture of high street and high fashion, and the models. The aim of all Clothes Show Live fashion shows appears to be to get the male models down to their underwear so the decibel levels from the screaming teenagers (and their mums) reach eardrum perforation point. After the show, the film goes off to be processed and the fi-senter Caryn Franklin joins the nalists go for a wander around the hundreds of stands. Ted Baker's stand is mobbed all day by shoppers waiting 40 minutes for a knock-down £10 T-shirt or a rumble through the piles of funsome T-shirt duo Antoni & Al-Que Sera-where you can buy the Clothes Show Live 1997 is at latest in toe rings, of all things -This is like no other fashion Dolly Danglers, a favourite for cember. Call 0121-767 4444.

hair accessories, Fat Face, for polar fleeces, and Mambo, for surfwear, British designers Pearce Fionda are attending the show for the first time and shoppers can have their posters autographed by the designers themselves. Round the corner, Ben de Lisi is autographing carrier hags containing his bargain-priced eveningwear. Waiting for their films to be processed, the five finalists are too preoccupied to shop. At 5pm, the prints are ready to be edited, Paul Gadd, 28, and Christine Coombes, 22, are both from the photography degree course at Swansea Institute of Higher Education; David Vintiner, 21, is in his final year of a photography degree at Blackpool; Laura Woolnough, 25, studied a BTech in photography at London College of Printing and now works on the picture desk at the Press Association: James Moriarty, 20, is at Reading School of Art & Design in his final year of an HND in photography. Clothes Show Live pre-judge's huddle and we decide unanimously on the winner -James - and the two runners up. Paul and Christine. For his shot that catches the movement and atmosphere of the show as well as shirts, ties, jumpers and trousers. the clothes, James wins a Fuji Antoni Burakowski, of the GA645AF Autofocus camera worth £995 and will have the action with so much dry ice hil- ison, loves the energy and party chance to follow in Chris Moore's ends of their lenses. They have months before they come to the er next spring at London Fashion show," he says. Other names Week. The two runners up re-

Birmingham's NEC until 10 De-

Young Catwalk Photographer of the Year, James Moriarty's photograph, above, has it all - the movement, the showbiz pizzazz, the clothes, and the party atmosphere too style from the two finalists. Laura Wootnough, above left, capturing stretch denim in action, and David Vintiner, left, who chose to concentrate on the atmosphere of the show rather than the clothes

FASHION MOMENT

Spotted shopping at the Clothes Show Live on Friday were these two young walking. talking Barbie dolls - Sam. 15. and Hannah, 14. They don't usually dress like this, but they made a special effort for a day out at the annual fashion extravaganza. "My mum made both the skirts out of pink fun fur," says Sam, "and we had an embarrassing time in Woolworth's having the Barbie vests and bags." Their entire outfits cost about £10 cach. "We didn't want to come in boring everyday clothes," says Sam. "This is the only place you can come dressed like this and nnbody would look twice."

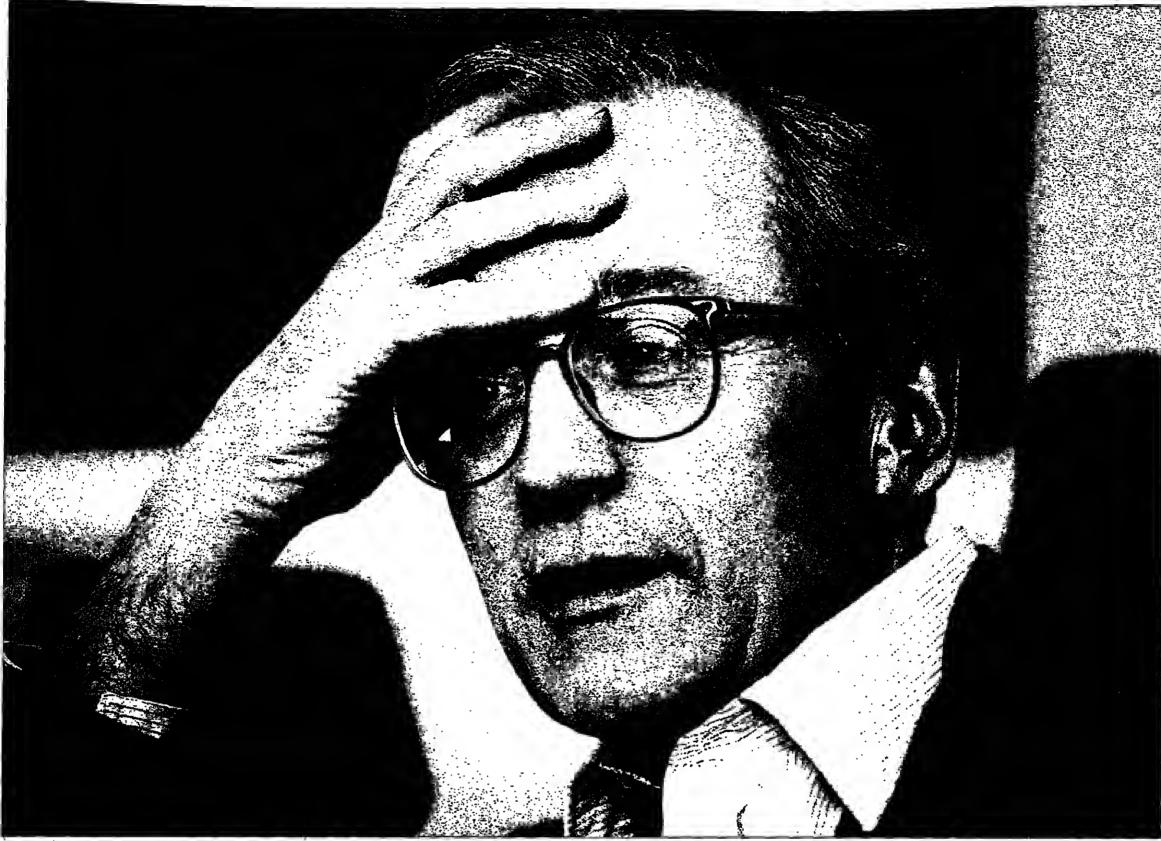

"We don't actually like the Barbie girl song," adds Hannah, who has far more sophisticated music tastes, like Jamiroquai and Skunk Anansie.

حيكذا من الدعل

15/INTERVIEW

Lord, what a nightmare at the opera

Lord Chadlington - aka Peter Gummer, younger brother of John - is talking about opera, about which he is passionate, of course. He says that if he could have a one-to-one with anybody it would be with Wagner, "so I could ask him some questions about the Ring cycle, and hetter understand it".

If he gets through, I say, could he also ask him if he's thinking of doing another series of Hart to Hart with Stefanie Powers? It was jolly good and is much-missed. Oddly, Lord Chadlington looks at me like I'm totally bonkers. That's the thing about opera buffs, they don't watch any old rubbish on the telly like the rest of us. Some might even say they're a bit estranged from the real world, which is why they're in the trouble they're in.

Last week, Lord Chadlington, the multi-millionaire PR whiz who founded Shandwick PR, now the largest PR company in the world, was forced to resign as chairman of the Royal Opera House after one of the most savage reports on a national arts body ever.

No, the report did not, as it happens, take him by surprise. "If I was an outsider looking in, I would think this organisation smells bad. It does look like a group of friends running it for their own self-

Which it is, isn't il? "No! There are 58 people - clever business people - who work there for free, but are never acknowledged." But if you're all so clever and financially astute, how come the house is in such a mess? Because, possibly, you treat it as a kind of extension of the Garrick Club, only with singing and dancing? "No. It's because it is underfunded," he claims. Oh come on, I say.

The report by the all-party committee chaired by Gerald Kaufman - said that although the ROH had received £98m of taxpayer's money over the past five years. plus £78m of lottery cash, it was guilty of incompetence, disastrous financial planning and misjudgement". The debts currently amount to £7m. The failure to secure a permanent home while Covent Garden was being rebuilt was the result of abysmal management". The chairman should go. The chief executive (Mary Allen) should go. The board should go. Sack the lot of them, Kaufman effectively said. "They need a good boot up the ias," concluded The Sun.

DEBORAH ROSS TALKS TO LORD CHADLINGTON

Lord Chadlington describes the report as "outrageous" and "scandalous". The trouble, he sighs, is that "we all care too much about the quality of the productions we put on". But. still, you resigned? "It seemed, in the circumstances, the only honourable thing to do. Lord Carrington, who is something of a hero of mine, resigned over the Falklands crisis even though it wasn't his fault. Someone had to accept responsibility, so he did. I am accepting responsibility in this instance." So you don't consider yourself personally to blame in any way? "I actually saved the house from going bust! Twice! Which is no small thing!" Lord Chadlington, clearly, is not about 10 fall on his sword. Has be, I wonder, spoken to John about it? Very sweetly, he phoned me this morning from Kyoto where he is at an environmental conference." And? "He said: 'Why, Peter, why?" To which you replied? "Because, John, I don't want to sit on the fence until pushed. I would prefer to get off by myself." I tell Lord Chadlington it's a good joh be didn't go into politics because in politics you have to hang on in there until the yes, very much established as a hachelor last possible minute. It's almost de riqueur. Look at Piers Merchant, who kept sticking his head out from under the duvet and saying: "It's not what it seems. Vote for me!"

Lord Chadlington - who has advised the Tories on the presentation of controversial policy areas such as the Gulf War - accepts I may have a point. "I spent 18 years supporting the Tory government and when I look back the one thing they did wrong was not accepting responsibility when things went wrong." Does he admire New Labour? "I do think they are doing the right things, yes." Would be say he was more Labour than Tory now? "I tend to go for people more than policies. I admired Thatcher enormously. I admired John Major enormously. He was a man of great principle and great courage. I don't know anyone in the Labour party very well."

We meet at the beadquarters of Shandwick in Mayfair. His office, with its hig. fat Hello!-style sofas and twinkling chandeliers is very cosy. Lord Chadlington opens a very good bottle of chablis, then asks: "How long are you going to want me for?" I am so soug. I tell him, there'll prohably be no getting rid of me. I imagine that is how the board at the Opera House felt up until last week.

No. Lord Chadlington won't have a drink himself. He gave up alcohol 14 years ago after a bout of hepatitis. His doctor told him not to drink for a year, so he didn't. then when he could he found he didn't want to any more. "I didn't get hangovers. I didn't get jet lag. I fest better." This is a great shame because the wine is lovely.

Peter Gummer is much better looking than John, which isn't saying much, I know, hut it's still better than not being better looking than John, which would be very distressing, I imagine. He is wearing a Val Doonican-style red cardie but is still quite dandy and dapper, with a sort of John Inman look about his features and a highpitched, rather girlie laugh. If you were to meet him at a cocktail party, you'd assume be was a bacbelor.

He's not, though. On the contrary, he is a great family man. There are photographs of his four children - Naomi. Chloe, Eleanor and James, who range in age from 7 to 14 - everywhere. He actually always wanted six children hut his wife, Lucy, put her foot down. He was 40 and,

("with a nice little flat in Knightsbridge") when he first met Lucy 15 years ago. She. then 25, turned up at Shandwick for a job interview. "And the moment she walked in I thought oh-oh, I can't have her working here." Why? Because you funcied her from the off? "Yes. I guess so." He arranged for a friend to employ her, then phoned her up to ask her out for dinner. They were engaged within five days of meeting. How romantic, I say. "I think I was looking to get settled down," he says. Would he describe himself as a passionate man? "I am affectionate and demonstrative. if that's what you mean," he replies. Do you ever cry. Yes, he says, opera makes him cry.

The Gummer boys - John, Peter and their younger brother, Mark - did not start out as grand or lordly, Their father, Canon Selwyn Gummer, an Anglican vicar, was an autodidact from a Welsh coalmining background. Their mother, Sybille, was the daughter of a railway worker. Sybille was always very ambinious for her sons, if there was homework to be done, they did it be-the kitchen table in the draughty rectory. It was Selwyn's job to stack up the Pulpit Monthlies into piles of 50, John's job to put them in envelopes, Peter's job to seal them, Mark's to put the stamp on and Sybille's to address the envelopes with her "addressograph machine". Their reward would be one Quality Street each after every 100 completed. Peter's favourite was "the one in the shape of a stick". The chocolatecovered toffee? In the yellow wrapper? "Yes, Yes! Whereas mother always liked the purple ones. What are the purple ones?" Brazil nuts. I don't know much about opera, I tell him, but you can't fault me when it comes to Quality Street.

Anyway, the Pulpit Monthly "paid for our educations, by which Peter means it paid for his education. John (who, of course, went on to become a Tory MP and Cahinet minister) and Mark (who now runs a successful manufacturing business) both won scholarships to King's School, Rochester, whereas Peter had to be paid for. He says he's always been the thicko of the family. John is "exceptionally intel-didn't really have a vocation. "I started reading Kierkegaard, Sartre and Camus and my view of things changed. I realised the world was a much more difficult and complex place." He switched to a philosophy and psychology degree. No, his father was not upset. "He only ever wanted us to do what we ourselves wanted to do."

Peter isn't nearly as religious as John, who recently converted to Catholicism. "No, it wasn't a surprise. He is a very saintly and devout man." But, still, he believes in God, yes. No, incidents like Dunhlane do not shake his belief. "Let's put it this way," he says. "When you listen to Bach, or smell your children's bair, how can you not believe in God?" Peter might not be an intellectual, but he is extremely cunning, I think. Certainly, God couldn't hope for a better PR spokesman.

Anyway, he was only appointed chairman of the Royal Opera House in September 1996, so he did inherit a lot of the problems, yes. The previous chairman and general director, Sir Angus Stirling and Jeremy Isaacs, should have ensured a permanent venue would he available during the closure, But, still, Lord Chadlington was specifically chastised for not revising the plans, or appointing a financial director for a year. His failure to act, said Kaufman. "ensured a fragile financial position became acute". The Opera House could not even supply any regular accounts or cost flow sheets. "There were some inadequacies in that regard, yes." The rest of the board have also resigned, but will be staying on in caretaker roles. There was no other way, he says. "There had to he an Aegean-style clearout so that we could give the Arts Council and the Department of Culture, Media and Sport the opportunity to start again, and shed the past."

Anyway, he has to shed me, now, because he's due to go back to Oxfordshire, where he lives. He may no longer be chairman of the Royal Opera House, but that's OK. "One has to ultimately do what is best for the organisation you are serving." As he steps into the chauffeur-driven Bentley gently purring outside, Lord Chadlington is, I think, feeling more heroic than chastened. He seems elated, almost. He has done a Lord Carrington. He's taken a disaster and turned it into a personal triumph. Good PR, or what?

'I don't want to sit on the fence until pushed. I would rather get off by myself'

lore anything else, and did it well. Academic achievement was important, as was success. Her view seemed to be "you are put on this earth for a purpose and you will jolly well go about fulfilling that purpose".

Certainly, the Gummer family were an industrious and aspirational Int. To supplement his income, Selwyn struck on the idea of writing other vicars' sermons for them for £1 a go. "He started in 1950 and by the time he had finished had about 3,000 vicars on his list." Did each vicar get the same sermon each month? "Yes." So come Easter Sunday, say, there would be 3,000 vicars giving exactly the same sermon? Yes, And I remember once going to Broadstairs on holiday, and going to the church there, and nudging my father and saying this is one of yours, dad."

All the family participated in getting out the Pulpit Monthly, as it was called. Come Saturday night, they would gather around lectual" while Mark "is just brilliant". He never felt inadequate, though, "because I was better at football than both of them".

He went into PR, he later says, "because I just wasn't clever enough to do anything else". Oh come on, I say, you don't go on to build a company like Shandwick - which has 89 offices worldwide and emplovs 2,500 people and represents everyone from British Gas to Joan Collins - by being a total dimwit. "Perhaps," he suggests, "it just says something about the industry." Or, alternatively, "being stupid can be an advantage, because you know that to get anywhere you are going to have to work very hard. A lot of the very brilliant people I was at school with have disappeared from sight."

Peter went to Selwyn College, Canibridge, where he initially studied theology, having planned to become a priest. But at the end of the first year he decided he

DINAH HALL

A happy childhood is a useless grounding for a creative adulthood

For various logistical reasons 1 had to take my 11-year-old with me to a lecture by the children's author Michael Morpurgo. I had hoped it might prove a formative intellectual experience for him, particularly after we'd cleared up the misconception that a lecture meant Mr Morpurgo was going to tell us off. Also I must confess that I thought it might be valuable ammunition in the parental competition stakes at Christmas: get from the state-system it the Posh Cousins are bound to be broked up for Stravinsky workshops. Ultimately, though, I don't think he was impressed. "I was a hit disappointed." he reflected on the way home. In what way, darling?" I prompted, hoping for a sort of junior Bragg-esque critical analysis of the evening that I could repeat verbatim to my brother-in-law thwell, of course, this is the sort of intellectual and acity that you you don't fill their heads up with times tables and spellings ... 1. But it was the refreshments that had fallen short of his expectations. There were no crisps.

Not that the evening did much for me either, I remain a firm fan of Morpurgo, but ancedotes of his childhood - ritual humiliation at boarding school, a father who walked out on him as a baby - confirmed what I have long suspected. A happy childhood is a uscless grounding for a creative adulthood: most of the best children's writers had early lives which were scarred by the loss of a parent and marked by constant uprooting. The closest my children have ever come to misery is being denied a Ninlendo. Am wondering if we should divorce for the sake of their creative development. Otherwise risk raising a clutch of hank managers. And now they won't even be able to look back with loathing at the memory of oxtail stew (am convinced it was the childhood trauma of neck of lamh with pearl barley that came between me and accountancy). There was a wonderful back-of-thebike-sheds camaraderie around the beef counter at Waitrose last week: felt a definite French Resistance style frisson between me and the man who was rooting around for bones among the packets of chuck steak. But ac-

tail came from a cow-I thought that it belonged to the ox. It had always seemed to me slightly immoral that we killed a creature simply for its tail and kidneys, but to be honest I had never stopped to wonder why you didn't ever see fields of oxen. This double shock - the non-existence of oxen, and the non-availability of their tails - maybe just what I needed to kick-start me in to writing that novel.

tually it was news to me that ox-

Lord Dainton

Frederick Sydney Dainton, chemist: born Sheffield II November 1914; University Demonstrator in Chemistry Cambridge University 1944-46, H.O. Jones Lecturer in Physical Chemistry 1946-50; Fellow, St Catharine's College, Cambridge 1945-50; Professor of Physical Chemistry, Leeds University 1950-65; FRS 1957; Chairman, Association for Radiation Research 1964-66: Vice-Chancellor, Nottingham University 1965-70: President. Faraday Society 1965-67;

Chairman, Advisory Committee on Scientific and Technical Information 1966-70; Chairman, National Libraries Board 1968-69: Chairman, Council for Scientific Policy 1969-72; Dr Lee's Professor of Chemistry, Oxford University 1970-73; Kt (971; Chairman, Advisory Board for Research Councils 1972-73; President, Chemical Society 1972-73; Chairman, University Grants Committee 1973-78; Chairman, British Library Board 1973-85; Chairman, Protection Board 1973-85; Chancellor, Sheffield University 1978-97; Presiden Society of Designer Craftsmen 1985-97; created 1986 Baron Dainton: President, Arthritis and Rheumatism Council for

Among Fred Dainton's many contributions to public life was his chairmanship of the Advisory Dainton. Committee on Science and Technology Information from 1966 to 1970, and his chairmanship of the committee leading to the Enquiry into the Flow of Candidates in Science and Technology into Higher Education presented to the a quizzical expression and modthen Secretary of State, Patrick est demeanour rose slowly at the

Research 1988-97; married

1942 Barbara Wright (one son, two daughters); died

Oxford 5 December 1997.

Gordon-Walker, in January 1968. portant and acted-upon reports most awkward and penetrating of the decade, partly because it was so well and concisely writ- Hugely disconcerted and ten. Dainton argued that there metaphorically perspiring I sat should be a broad span of stud- down and frantically whispered ies in the sixth forms of schools to Mrs Cattermole, the chairand that in consequence irre- man for the evening, "Who in science, engineering and tech- new Vice-Chancellor," she nology should be postponed as smirked, "and his name is Fred late as possible. The son of an Dainton, and he's charming, illiterate father who none the and he's devastating." less passionately believed in educational success should be

nds

Hc recommended that all pupils should study mathematics until they left school and that the teaching of mathematics should concern itself not only with training for discipline of thought and for logical reasoning, but also to show the effect of associated mathematical thinking with one or more of the experimental or engineering sciences, or with economics or other studies. This was a new concept in the late 1960s.

He underlined the urgent need to infuse breadth, humanity and up-to-dateness in the science curriculum and its teaching; that schools and local education authorities should take steps to ensure that the majority of pupils in secondary education should come into early contact with up-to-the-moment, relevant and attractive teaching of science within a five-year period; and that there should he provision on a co-operative basis, between schools if necessary, of high-quality introductory courses of the highest quality in science and mathematics for younger pupils.

He thought that universities should consider a further range of courses designed to attract into science and engineering able students who were not committed to these fields of study, hut who were otherwise qualified to benefit from "ab initio" courscs in them at university level. All this may sound no great shakes in 1997. It was pretty brand new in 1967 and there are two generations of students who owe more than they know to Fred

In April 1965, I was asked by

Nortingham University Labour Club to speak on the Wilson government's science policy. Speech and questions went swimmingly. Then a man with back of the meeting - and pro-This was one of the most im- ceeded to put the half-dozen questions that could he put.

The first lime I ever heard

Fred Dainton: 'charming and devastating' - and an articulate devil's advocate the home of C.T.R. Wilson, him of the Cloud Chamber (the great experiment enabling atomic particles to be traced). who asked that if ever I became a Member of ParliamenI I should take advice from a pupil of his at Sidney Sussex, called Fred Dainton.

This I did for a third of a century. I saw Dainton at parliamentary and scientific committee him at the Foundation for Science and Technology meet-what others have said and yet being constructive and giving a

As a friend he was a politician's dream. Phone him and he would give you, regardless of your party label, a practical opinion based on distilled knowledge. On some occasions herent expression that was to be he would say "I am not as wellinformed as I ought to be - I will meetings in Westminster Hall. fessor so-and-so", and he did just he was remembered for swim- than a hillionth of a second. that, punctiliously and quickly, ming at Parson's Pleasure each ings in the heautiful rooms of Sheffield. His father was a the Royal Society; and through- craftsman mason, himself born his life when his hehaviour he told the House of Lords on out he continued to he the in 1857. 13 years before com- might have been thought to most articulate - and, yes. pulsory education was intro- have been "mad", for actually education. Dainton held it Dainton's name had been when charming and devastating - duced, and who therefore could he was the most rational of men. sacrosanct that the avenue to canvassing in the Roxburgh, devil's advocate. I have never be excused from being unable. At school he had chanced to Selkirk and Peehles constit- seen anyone put a point of to read or write. However uency in 1958. I was invited into view so forcefully torpedoing George Dainton had insisted on his own children's reading to him much of what was best in minimum of personal offence. English literature. Fred told me that as a seven-year-old he had started reading to his then 65-year-old father and that this gave him a facility and confidence in language for co-

> He won a scholarship to St was prohably the only time in valuable throughout his life.

read The Kinetics of Chemical Change in Gaseous Systems, an advanced work which might have stretched an honours chemistry graduate. Dainton's exceptional mind was fascinated by both the contents and the style of the book. The author, Sir Cyril Hinshelwood, was Professor of Physical Chemistry at Oxford and this tempted Dainton to try for a university place from a school which had never before sent an undergraduate to Oxford.

He was greatly fortunate in that the tutor at St John's was Dr H.W. (later Sir "Tommy") Thompson. It was Thompson who initiated Dainton into studies of chemical reaction rates, a topic as wide as chemistry itself. In this field for over 30 years and latterly with groups of research students, many of whom became eminent in their own right, Dainton published some 200 research papers characterised by unusual thoroughness and depth of analysis. Years later, as Chancellor of Sheffield University, he was to say: "The thing I treasure most of all is the regard of my former students, who invite me to visit them all over the world."

In elementary gas reactions Dainton struggled with the intricacies of chain reactions, on which he wrote monographs, and with the complications arising from photochemical activation, both features encountered in many studies of anionic polymerisation.

When, in 1965, I visited Chalk River in Canada, Professor W.B. Lewis asked after Dainton. This was a natural question because from 1945 he had studied the chemical effects of radiation at Chalk River and made important contributions to a field of great hiological, including medical, significance. Physiological changes occur in an aqueous milieu where all radiation harder than the ultraviolet produces electrons and other ionised particles. Dainton was one of the pioneers of the aqueous electron, extensively exploring its chemical aspects. Even to the chemical kineticist this was a topic of disheartening complexity with some of its

Dainton more than most medical effects of his work. As 25 Fehruary 1997:

For well over 40 years I have had a deep personal and professional interest in research in clinical medicine carried out by staff of university medical schools and institutes. For various periods in my life - for example, 35 chairman for the Advisory Board for Research Councils and its predecessor, the Council for Scientific Policy. and subsequently chairman of the University Grants Committee - t was responsible for the allocation of public funds to be used for that purpose.

Dainton told the Lords that he had learnt many lessons first and foremost was that the quality of future patient treatment rested upon the quality and extent of medical education and research today, which in turn were increasingly and critically dependent upon basic scientific research. That was why he had always advocated close collaboration between highquality departments of hiological and physical sciences with medical schools and institutes. No man in post-war Britain did more to hring this about.

His colleagues in chemistry recognised his distinction. He became President of the Faraday Society and of the Royal Chemical Society, who bestowed on him its greatest honour, the Faraday Lectureship. Cornell appointed him to the prestigious George Baker Lectureship. For 40 years he was a Fellow of the Royal Society and in 1969 he was given the Davy Medal. In 1937, he left for Cambridge to study reaction kinetics under the Nobel prizewinner R.G.W. Norrish. It was one of Dainton's gifts that he could handle difficult and brilliant scientists, and he got on well with Norrish. Supported by awards from the Goldsmiths' Company, he joined Sidney Sussex College.

At the age of 36 Dainton became Professor of Physical Chemistry at Leeds. There, at Cookridge, he directed research at a special radiological unit before becoming Vice-Chancellor of Nottingham in 1965, which took him into the stratosphere of the British academic establishment, of which he was to be. a central figure for four decades. He told me at a meeting at the Foundation for Science and Technology over the dinner table that the only reason he had gone to Nottingham was so that he could establish find out from my friend Pro- John's College, Oxford, where initial stages occurring in less a medical school at the university. He was not exaggerating.

The years 1965-70 were ones Dainton was born in 1914, in morning of term at 7.45 am. This chemists was interested in the of student turbulence, and unlike immensely popular amongst all the formidable Michael Swann in Edinhurgh and many other distinguished Vice-Chancellors zoologist of distinction, who Dainton was adept at dealing deftly with militant students. I survives him. heard the story that he had on one fraught occasion quoted from Mao's Little Red Book. "You should respect your teachers; they know more than you do." Dainton assured me that this was not apocryphal hut true.

lompass to se

From Nottingham he was tempted back to Oxford to succeed Hinshelwood, the inspirer of his earlier attachment to reaction kinetics, as Dr Lee's Professor of Chemistry. Although the Dr Lee's chair had notable prestige - Hinshelwood's sole predecessor had been Frederick Soddy, also a Nobel Laureate - it did not offer the range or quality of influence which Dainton, by now Sir Frederick, was able to exert. Lord Porter of Luddenham, who shared a laboratory with Dainton "when we were both young" at Cambridge, remembers his commenting that "being professor at Oxford was a position of considerable influence and little power. Fred," says Porter, "liked power." After three years, in 1973, he became Chairman of the University Grants Committee.

The UGC was the longestablished intermediary between the Treasury and the UK universities, and the body which distributed government funding to the individual institutes - then already numbering 33. In this key position he had much contact with government circles, including with one Minister for Education, Margaret Thatcher, herself an Oxford chemistry graduate.

Porter remembers Dainton as a good tennis partner at Cambridge; the same qualities of nimhleness and dexterity. which stood him in good stead in his laboratory, were related to a lifelong admiration for craftsmanship, in which his illiterate father had excelled.

Of his multitude of interests one other must be mentioned: he was Chairman of the British Library Board from 1978 to 1985. It was under his guidance that the assessment was made which resulted in the British Museum Library's being transformed into the British Library and taking into account the impact of electronic technologies.

After becoming a life peer in 1986, Dainton established himself in Parliament, where he was parties. He was married to Barbara Wright, herself a research with a son and two daughlers

- Tam Dalyell

Billy Bremner

Billy Bremner, football player and manager: born Stirling 9 December 1942; played for Leeds United 1958-76, Scotland 1965-75 (54 caps). Hull City 1976-78; manager, Doncaster Rovers 1978-85. Leeds United 1985-88. Doncaster Rovers 1989-91: died Doncaster 7 December

Billy Bremner was one of Britain's most fiery, skilful and industrious footballers of the post-war years. An essential cog in the pragmatic, often overrohust yet frequently wonderfully entertaining Leeds United team of the Setties and Seventies, he was also the red-haired dynamo in Scotland's international side, winning 54 caps. He was only 5ft 5in tall yet his stature, at a time when football was more physical than it is tuday, allowed him to become not only the inspiration and captain of the championship, Fairs' Cup, FA Cup and League Cup winning Leeds side that Dnn Revie produced, hut also the driving force in the 1974 Senttish World Cup side that was among the best that country has raised.

Leeds saw his footballing potential when he was a schoolboy in his home-town of Stirling. where he played for Gowanhill for heing cynical and over-he made the first of his 585 ap-Bremner seemed a natural indeveloped into one of the points. loughest and most constructive and Bremner, Leeds had a magnificent midfield.

As with many players of his time, he mixed a hard, enthucated approach to enjoying the pleasures that comparative riches brought, yet he remained astonishingly fit into his midthirties. As an international, he won his first cap in 1965, not long before England won the 1966 World Cup. He took enurmnus pleasure in playing his part in heating the world champions at Wembley the following year.

After several disappniniments, Leeds finally won a European competition (the Fairs' Cup) in 1968, which was also the year Bremner guided them to League Cup success. The fullowing season he won an elusive championship medal. By then Revie's team had the reputation that too often ignored the skills hoth players charged with pearances over 16 years for of Bremner and his colleagues hreach of the peace. No civil Leeds. When he arrived at El- and cost them a lot of sympa- action was taken but both land Road Revie was himself thy when further major honours missed I1 matches through the still on the playing staff and took slipped from their grasp him under his wing. At first until they won the championship again in 1974, beating a side right but over the years he fine Liverpool side by five

In the World Cup of that goalscoring half-backs in the year in Germany Scotland country. With Johnny Giles were Britain's only representatives and Bromner, then 32 had to deal with a lot of hehind-thescenes arguing over payments. He disliked the responsibility siastic attitude to the game and after had-tempered exwith an almost equally dedi- changes with the Scottish officials there was even a threat that he and the controversial winger Jimmy Juhnstone would be sent home. He not only stayed but led the Scots to a draw with Brazil. Scotland were unfortunately eliminated without losing a match and Pele was full of praise for Bremner, who nevertheless began the following temporary player, accurately season with an incident that put a shadow over his career. In the Charity Shield at Kevin Keegan were centrestage in a foul-laden match seen on televisinn. They exchanged punches and, rightly, were sent off. Had that been an end to the malter it would not have been so had but both petulantly threw away their Juniors. He was only 17 when professional. It was a criticism shirts. A spectator tried to have ensuing suspension.

Bremner's international career ended in unfortunate circumstances in 1975, when he and four other internationals were hanned for life from playing for Scotland after being accused of unruly behaviour at a Copenhagen night-club and in the team's hotel. Bremner denied the allegations hut Leeds too warned him about his future conduct. His illustrious career at the club ended a year later when he moved on to captain Hull City.

In the early Eighties he led Doncaster Rovers out of the fourth division, then returned to Leeds in 1985, where he had three years as manager before again returning to Doncaster.

Charlie Nicholas, a conembraced Bremner's contributinn to foothall by saying: "His determination and love of Wembley he and Liverpool's the game made him such a difficult opponent. He could tackle, score goals and spray passes all over. That Leeds team would play 30 or 40 passes without an opponent touching the ball. Billy Bremner was some player."

- Naman Fox

DEATHS

BURROWS: Dr Norman Eltion, peacefulle in hospital on 2 December, aged 85. Funeral Wednesday 10 De-cember 2 30pm. Si Marylebone Parish Church, Marylebone Rd, London Wt, and afterwards at the Medical So-ciety of London, Donations to charities in lieu of flowers to J.H. Kemon,

9 Pond Street, NW3. Announcements for Gazette & IRTHS, MARRIAGES & DEATHS (Births, Adoptions, Marriages, Deaths, Memorial services, Weeding anniversaries, in Memoriam) should be sent in writing to the Gazette Editor, The Independent I Graph Service Correct Where

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES & DEATHS

293 2012 (24-hour answering machine 0771-293 2011) or faxed to 0771-293 2010, and are charged at £6.50 a line (VAT extra). OTHER Gazentre announcements (notices, functions, Forthcoming marriages, Marriages) must be submitted in writing and are charged at £10 a line, VAT extra. Please include a designate talenham methods.

Birthdays

Sir Ralph Carr-Ellison, Lord-Lieutenant of Tyne and Wear, 72: Sir Julian Critchley, former MR 67: Professor Sir Roger Elliott, physicist. 69: Richard Fleischer, film director. 81; Mr Lucian Freud, painter, 75; Mr James Galway, flautist, 58; Sir de Villiers Grauff, former leader, South African United Party, 84: Mrs Pauline Green, MEP, 49: Mr Ian Greig, cricketer, 42: Mr Geoff Hurst, footballer, 5rg Mr Stephen Jeffenes. cricketer, 40: Sir Peter Levene, former chairman, Canary Wharf, 56;

Sir Jonathan Parker, High Court judge, 60: Lord Prys-Davies, solicitor and politician, 74; Sir Stepheo Richards. High Court judge, 47; Sir Bernard Rix, High Coun judge, 53; Mr Paul Rutherford, singer, 38; Mr Maximitian Schell, actor, 67; Dr Sir Alan Stewart, former Vice-Chancellor, Massey University, 80: Mr Michael Unger, Editor, Man-chester Evening News, 54: Mr David Verey, chief executive and chairman. Lazard Brothers, 47; Sir William Wood, former Second Crown Estate Miss Jenny Linden, actress, 57: Mr Commissioner, 81.

صحدات الاعل

Terry McDermoit, footballer, 46: ROYAL ENGAGEMENTS

ROYAL ENGAGEMENTS
The Quoon holds an investidate at Buckingham Palace. The Dute of Edinburgh, Schaw Thustee, attends a meeting of the Inustees at the National Maritime Misseum, Greenwich, Loudon SE Ib, as a Fellow of the Rayal Saccety, chairs a meeting of the Project Scheme Braid of Patrons at Buckingham Palace, and, as Patron and Trustee, bosts a dumer for the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Charter for Business at Buckingham Palace. Princess Alexandra, President of the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, attacks a carofconcer to be held by the Soutish Events Committee of the Fund in Glasgow Cathedral; and visits Lambhill Court. Kinning Park, Glasgow.

Changing of the Guard

CASE SUMMARIES: 8 DECEMBER 1997

The following notes of a judgment were prepared by the reporters of the All England Law Reports.

Inheritance tax Frankland v IRC, CA (Peter Gibson, Therpe, Chadwick LID 7 Nov 1997

Section 144 of the Inheritance death, but the section did not discretionary trust to a hene-death. ficiary within two years of the Christopher McCall QC. Dirik Jackson death of the testator should be (Wandroughs Willer Hargrave) for the Tax Act 1984 provided that apply if the transfer was made properly transferred out of a in the first quarter after the regarded as taking effect un- tapayer, Michael Furness (Inland Revder the will from the date of eme Solicitor) for the Commissioners.

17/SHARES

Compass to serve up Christmas cheer for investors as profits surge

WEEK AHEAD

until Christmas, the flow of stocks, but a handful of second world's largest contract caterer, pany reports full-year figures £86.8m last time round. tomorrow, expected to be company results from hlue lagged the rest of the market Labour came to power, and her week. The food services com- of £110m to £122m, against

Despite excellent trading clarified, a move which is not around the £137m mark, up during the summer, which will from £114.3m last year. Ana- have boosted UK tour operlysts are anticipating an im- ating profits, Airtours could carnings per share. But ques- in the coming months. The hig £227m on SHRM, the fourth- Commission report into anti-France, back in June, so the travel companies. Margaret real test now is whether Com- Beckett, President of the ing once again this week, with pass can reward its sharehold- Board of Trade, is to pro- a number of the smaller hrew-few figures from Footsie October began to revive them. be too complacent. That said, Hot on the heals of Com- given the low cost of buildays liners will no doubt keep in pass comes another leisure offered by the likes of Airtours, vestors-and the market-busy. company, Airtours. The travel Mrs Beckett is unlikely to figures on Wednesday. Analysts a raw deal. Instead, she will is one of the high-points in the are looking for pre-tax profits probably recommend the distinction between tour opera-expected to hit profitability. The other point of interest is when, or if, Carnival Corpressive 17 per cent growth in find itself flying into turbulence poration, the US cruise operator, will hid. Carnival owns a tions over future growth are uncertainty is the outcome of 30 per cent stake in Airtours, certain. The company spent a Monopolies and Mergers and speculation about its intentions has boosted Airtnur's biggest contract caterer in competitive behaviour by share-price rise in recent times.

tors and travel agents is

Christmas spirits are flow-

Shares in Compass have tation she has acquired since off the block, releasing inter-behind schedule. ims today in the region of chips seems to be dwindling. in recent months, although an nickname of "Mrs Block-it", £16m, compared with £14.7m This week, there are precious analysts' trip to the States in tour operators can't afford to last year. Market uncertainties about the acquisition of the Pitcher & Piano chain continue to haunt the group, which has underperformed the market by Compass Group, the operator unveils its full-year believe consumers are getting 5 per cent over the last six months. Marston experts per cent. predict the roll-out of the up-

With around 15 shopping days over the next couple of years. next year, and given the repu- Thompson & Evershed is first market bars will have fallen £11m last year. A strong third-quarter trading state-

Full-year figures from Vaux Group are out tomorrow. Pre- department stores operator. a reasonably upbcat perfortax profits range between £37m However, analysts suspect that mance from the DIY suband £39m, up from £34.9m last year. The Swallow hotels division is expected to steal the tember more difficult, while limelight once again, with profits likely to have risen 17

Analysts are braced for a disappointing performance take solace from a strong conlets. A profits warning recently from Greenalls, which pointed summer, will also overshadow Vaux. News of a succession strategy once Sir Paul Nicholson retires as chairman would cheer investors.

Allders, one of the few retailers reporting this week, is stores in Croydon, the Southgearing up for full-year profits of around £19 to 22m against Kingfisher release

tentative evidence of a slowdown in spending from buildalso throw up problems. There is also likely to be an from tenanted pubs, but will update on how Aliders intends to improve performance tribution at the managed out- at some of its new stores. The group snapped up seven Maples stores in September. to muted beer sales over the More important, though, will be news of Allders' future ex-Allders will set up a flagship store in central London. It already operates department

ing society windfall gains may

second half, boosted by wind- ment this week. Kingfisher fall spending, will help the aficionados are looking out for the "Diana effect" and the sidiary, B&Q, and steady weather may have made Sep- progress at Superdrug and Comet. Figures from Kingfisher's Woolworths chain will be scrutinised for any indication of how Christmas sales are doing. But there is likely to be bad news from Darty, the French electrical retailer wholly owned by Kingfisher. Among others reporting lowards the end of this week is Shield Diagnostics, the hiotechnology company. It is rumoured that Shield may use pansion plans. Those in the its interim results presentation know are speculating that on Thursday to announce a commercialisation deal for its test for heart disease.

Lucas Varity is likely to turn in profits for the three months to the end of October of

Support of the state of the sta			the first quarter of ers reporting figures. Marsto		and £19 to 22m, against Kin	gfisher releases its around £85.6m.
3	Sender Device Beverrages 573 Askel Doseo 1800 1900 44 117 108 180 Askers 1400 1400 141 17 108 180 Askers 1400 1400 141 17 108 180 Askers 1400 1700 1700 1700 1700 181 Askers 1700 1700 1700 1700 1700 180 Askers 1700 1700 1700 1700 1700 180 Askers 1700	Michael Second Process Michael Micha	Westing West	DJFMANJJASDND	Color Colo	Indicate Prince
Security of the control of the contr	$\ \text{to dependent of $15 \text{sign} = 12.0 \text{of $1 \text{cond} \text{of } \text{sign} = 12.0 \text{of $1 \text{cond} \text{of } \text{cond} \text{cond} \text{of } \text{cond} \	10	18-03 000 150 477 17 17 18 18 18 18 18	ode Lm Stock Price Chg yel code Lm Sead 766 740 Try 75 (0) CDS 3/5 4/6 LM 3/8 1 NO 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 1.0 1/1 <t< td=""><td>Price Clog yild code 100 Ad 100 Ad</td><td> March Marc</td></t<>	Price Clog yild code 100 Ad 100 Ad	March Marc

Under investment pays dividends for RECs as customers lose out

Regional power companies have failed to spend more than £450m on investment over the past two years alone, despite receiving the money from customer bills.

Chris Godsmark, Business Correspondent, reports on figures which show the companies' shareholders, many of which are US power groups, are benefiting at the expense of consumers.

The documents, lodged recently with Offer, the electricity watchdog, reveal a huge discrepancy between the investment targets set by the industry regulator, on which customer hills were based, and the cash spent in practice by the 12 regional electricity companies (RECs). The targets were outlined by Offer in its final price cap for the RECs' distribution husinesses, which account for about a quarter of household electricity hills.

The RECs have to lodge their capital spending figures each year with Offer, along with forecasts of investment for the full fiveyears of the price control. Since the wave of REC takeovers saw 11 of the 12 businesses disappear from the stock market, these documents are one of the only clues to their performance under their new

According to the reports, the companies have spent £1.99hn over the first two vears of the price cap, to the end of March 1997. Yet Offer's five-year target implies they should have spent £2.45bn, a shortfall of more than 18 per cent.

Over the five-year price formula the companies now predict they will spend £5.5bn, a figure which is 10 per cent below the £6.1bn set by Offer. In holh cases the companies receive cash from consumers to fund their full investment target and have used the shortfall to generate bigger profits and more generous dividends for their

Yvonne Constance, head of the Chairmen's Group of Electricity Consumers' service improvements which the companies have not carried out. "The regulator shouldn't be letting them gel away with this. This money is going to their shareholders. If they don't spend the money, it turns into

The worst offender, according to the documents, is Seeboard, one of the seven US-owned RECs. Offer's 1995 statement said the company should spend £492m over the five-year price control, hut Seeboard now forecasts it will only need to invest £387m, a drop of 21 per cent.

Worse still, Seeboard's investment so far, at £109m, is 45 per cent below the £197m implied in the Offer formula. Seeboard last night disputed the methodology used in this calculation, which divides the five-year target into equal annual instalments. However, this arithmetic is used by other RECs, including Southern Electric, the only re-

CAPITAL	SPENDING	BY RECS

Offer projection for 1995 to 1997:	£2,449
Company spending, 1995 to 1997:	£1,996
	•
Underspend over two years;	£453m
Offer five-year plan, 1995 to 2000:	£6,100m

Company forecasts:

maining independent business and one of the few so far to invest up to its full £142m

John Weight, Seeboard's managing director of distribution: "This isn't money Offer said we had to spend. We spend money wisely and are always looking for ways to improve efficiencies."

Asked why consumers had not been given money back from the productivity improvements, as in the water industry, he contiqued: "That's what incentive regulation is all about. Offer will take that into account into the next price formula from 2000, so taking this too literally is dangerous."

Midlands Electricity, also US-owned, is Committees said customers were paying for uments. The company has told Offer it will a shortfall of more than a third.

spend £389m over the five years, a reduction of 22 per cent on the £500m in the price formula.

A spokeswoman for Midlands said the company had identified extra savings in several big projects since submitting its evidence to Offer. "We have told the regulator about this. There are number of projects we've deferred because of new technical developments such as switch goar and we can get the best value."

The figures are likely to increase fears that US groups have used the RECs as short-term "cash cows", in anticipation of a much tighter price formula from the millennium.

Other US-owned RECs spending less than the targets include Northern Electric. which expects to invest 18 per cent less than in the price formula, At East Midlands Electricity investment so far is 25 per cent down on the target. The company has told Offer it will spend 13 per cent less over the five years. London Electricity has also told Offer it will undershoot its five-year target by 13 per cent.

The under investment is expected to put pressure on Professor Stephen Littlechild as he begins work on the next price formula. Ian Byatt, the water regulator, this year asked several companies not to raise hills by as much as allowed in their price caps after concerns about low investment

The Department of Trade and Industry is understood to be investigating the issue of dividends paid out by RECs, as ministers mull over the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the takeover hid for The Energy Group, owner of Eastem Electricity, by PacifiCorp of the US. The Government is expected to clear the deal. hut only with new conditions to prevent PacifiCorp from milking excessive dividends from the regulated utility business.

The investment report lodged by Eastern could fuel the Government's concern. The company, which was bought by Hanson and then spun off into a separately quoted energy business, told Offer it would spend £138m less over the five years than the £847m implied by the price formula, a 16 per cent shortfall. Over the last another big offender according to the doc- two years the underspend has been £117m.

Accountants hatch plans for emu adoption

Price Waterhouse, the accounting giant, has adopted London Zoo's lone emu in a move it claims will encourage clients to focus attentions on the single currency.

Mark Austen, Price Waterhouse's senior partner (pictured above), said it was ironic that the bird had remained unadopted at the Zoo at the same time as many British companies remained in a state of

"EMU-denial". Price Waterhouse will pay for the hird's board and lodging, thought to cost from £1,500 a year, though the emu will remain nameless. According to the Zoo emus are difficult to sex. "We are rather hoping this one will lay an egg and settle the matter," said Fred Smith, the keeper.

Tesco signs on to New Deal

منطق المستندين المستن

Tesco, the UK's higgest selling supermarket chain, will today lay out plans to create 1,500 new jobs for the long-term unemployed under the Government's welfare to work programme. But many of the jobs will be lower paid and part time.

Tesco's plans will give the £4hn welfare to work programme, funded by the windfall tax on the privatised utility companies, its higgest boost since the scheme was launched in July's Budget. The TUC will welcome the package today as it launches a conference on the so-called New Deal programme.

Tesco will begin recruiting unemployed from next month in a pilot scheme at its head office and at 16 stores in Sevenage and Harlow and on Tayside. The group said it was aiming to have taken on all 1,500 of the new workers by the end of next year.

Under the scheme people unemployed for more than six months get a guaranteed joh for at least six months. Tesco said some of its recruits would be taken on from Government training schemes and would not be subsidised, though others would receive the £60-a-week incentive paid for out of the windfall-tax fund.

One criticism of the scheme has been that the jobs would merely displace others which would have been created anyway by expanding companies. Last year Tesco created almost 7,000 jobs and expanded its total workforce by 15,000, to 160,000.

Michael Wemms, Tesco's retail director and a member of the Government's taskforce. said this was "the wrong way to look at" the announcement. "We are creating job opportunities for people who wouldn't normally get them."

- Chris Godsmork

Government U-turn deals blow to British Telecom

British Telecom is expected to face more intense competition after a Government U-turn in Brussels which will see the UK ditch its system of phone competition from 2000. The Department of Trade and Industry last week dropped objectious to an EU directive which will force Britain to adopt equal access for phone networks. It means customers will be able to select a nominated carrier of choice for all long-distance calls, a move which in the US saw a rapid erosion of incumbent AT&T's domestic monopoly. The present system enables customers to use rival long-distance networks to BT's, but only if they dial a three-number access code before each call.

US boost for Phytopharm

Phytupharm, the company which is trying to turn ancient herbal remedies into prescription drugs, will today announce it has been allowed by the United States to start human clinical trials on a controversial treatment for eczema. The approval for Zemaphyte, which is based on 10 Chinese herbs, marks a significant development in drug research. It is the first time the Food and Drugs Administration (FDA), which regulates all prescription drugs sold in the USA, has recognised that natural plant products where the mode of action is unknown may have real therapeutic properties. The FDA's decision to grant Zemaphyte an IND (investigational new drug) application which allows human trials to begin, is also crucial to Phytopharm's prospects. Its shares, floated at 175p and now 45p, halved in value from almost 300p in February.

Care First posts its defence

Care First could welcome a raised takeover hid from Bupa, the rest home company said in its defence document posted to shareholders at the weekend. But it continues to recommend rejection of last month's Bupa offer of 150p a share in cash which values the company at £241m. It says the healthcare industry is in the early stages of a recovery and shares in Care First are undervalued. Between January and November occupancy rates have risen from 82.5 per cent to 86.9 per cent of the group's portfolio of 12.480 beds in 135

DIY market recovers

The surge in house prices and the increase in consumer confidence has fuelled a recovery in the UK Do-It-Yourself market, according to new research by Mintel, the market research group. It says the DIY market has grown by 10 per cent in real terms in the last five years and is now worth £7.43bn. But while the market has been growing it has also been consolidating around the larger operators such as B&Q and Sainsbury's Homebase, with a 14 per cent decline in the number of outlets. Mintel says independent hardware stores have borne the brunt of the decline with their numbers falling by 22 per cent.

Xmas spirits rise in offices

Companies are spending more on office Christmas parties this year, according to the Institute of Management. It said 54 per cent of businesses would be paying towards the celchrations, a 3 per cent rise on last year. Nearly a third of organisations will foot the entire hill. But while 41 per cent of firms pay bonuses, only 17 per cent do so at Christmas.

City jobs on the line as Swiss banking giants announce £35bn merger

Up to 2,000 highly paid City workers could lose their jobs after two Swiss banking giants, UBS and SBC, confirm plans today to merge operations in a deal worth £35bn. As Clifford German reports, the move comes as dealers and analysts in London wait for bonuses worth some £lbn.

According to analysts up to 10,000 jobs are at risk in Switzerland, with as many as 2,000 set to go in London, after Union Bank of Switzerland (UBS) and Swiss Bank Corporation (SBC) announce a full-hlown merger before the Swiss stock exchanges open this morning.

The two Swiss giants have combined assets of 800bn Swiss francs (£330bn), market capitalisation of SFr83hn and 57,000 employees, including 6,000 in London.

Today's announcement will confirm yesterday predicted a huge shake-out of their combined London workforces to cut

Job losses and insecurity have become a common feature of City mergers, despite the financial community's reputation for huge salaries. SBC's deal to buy SG Warhurg resulted in around 1,000 job cuts.

The rationale behind such deals has been the substantial overlap between the investment hanking businesses of SBC Warburg and UBS in London. Both are big players in international equities and corporate finance.

This deal comes at the start of the City bonus season, with payouts expected to rise for some key workers by as much as 311 per cent. Goldman Sachs, the US investment bank, is expected soon to pay more than 100 partners in its London operation bonuses of at least £1m each.

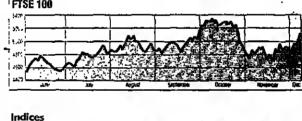

The merger is a response to increasing competition in retail and private banking the merger, subject to the approval of the in Switzerland, which is perhaps the most banking regulators in Switzerland, which over-banked country in the world. Until this could take months to secure. It is not year UBS was the biggest of the three big expected to go into details over closures. Swiss banks ahead of Credit Suisse, with job losses or disposals, though City experts a market capitalisation of £20bn and 28,500 employees.

Early last year it rejected an approach from Credit Suisse, which has since taken | Indices over Winterthur, the Swiss insurance company, to become the biggest single Swiss banking company. The UBS board has been under sustained pressure to improve its performance from shareholders.

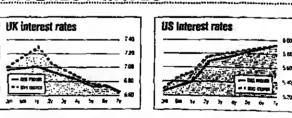

Its London-based investment management has also been criticised by trustees of pension funds. One of its leading fund managers. Tony Dye, made his much publicised move nearly two years ago to put more investment fund money into eash, in anticipation of heavy falls in US, UK and European stock markets which did not

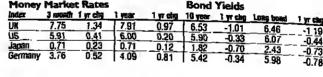

SBC is the smaller of the two banks with a market capitalisation of around £15bn and 26,500 employees, including around 3,000 in London. However, its 46-year-old chief executive, Marcel Ospel, is the driving force behind the merger, and was behind the successful acquisitions of SG Warburg in London and Dillon Read in

INTEREST RATES

Hi-tech firms lobby for tax breaks on R&D

Bank of England officials and hi-tech research companies are holding confidential talks which could lead to significant tax breaks for some of the UK's fastest growing Sameenn Ahmad examines a set of potentially controversial proposals.

The UK's high technology industry is lobbying the Treasury credits to help finance its reworking group, set up last month by the Treasury and Department of Trade and Industry to examine practical ways to improve the UK's record of investment in research and development, met for the first time last Thursday.

The 15-strong group is they make profits.

chaired by Dr Keith McCullagh. chief executive of British Biotech, the sector's leading company, and includes representatives from the Bank of England, the Confederation of British Industry and leading institutional investors. According to sources close to the confidential meeting, the group will present a report to Geoffrey Robinson, the Paymaster-General, in January, proposing tax breaks for biotechnology

Under the proposals, R&D spending would trigger a cash injection from the Inland Revto introduce a new system of tax crue into the profit and loss account as a tax credit. While search and development. A details are still being thrashed out, companies would get a proportion of what they invest in research paid hack as tax.

The scheme would allow loss-making companies to bring forward the tax credits that they build up, but cannot utilise under the current rules until

One source close to the talks and from the biotech sector said: "The timing of when we get muney can be the difference between success and failure. The question is surviving until the research pays off. It is of little use to building up huge tax losses which we can only enjoy if we make it to profit."

Ian Smith, pharmaceuticals analyst at Lehman Brothers 2000. pointed out the advantages to the Government: "Companies could du more research, employ more people and make discoveries more quickly. The genernment gets taxes faster and creates an industry that can compete better world-wide,"

However, the scheme would have a substantial start-up cost. Last year the UK biotech industry speni almost £300m on R&D. The difficulty will be persuading the Government to back a potentially costly scheme which could be criticised as a subsidy to an industry often viewed suspiciously by the public.

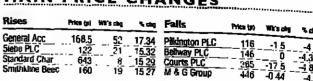

Airbus to launch stretched jet

Airbus Industrie is set to announce the launch of a $2hn programme to develop a stretched version of its A34ft jet. possibly as early as today. The 375-seat aircraft will compete head on with some versions of the Boeing 747 jumbo jet and will enter service shortly after

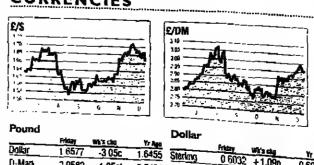

A meeting of the Airbus supervisory board in Toulouse last Friday is understood to have agreed to proceed with the the new aircraft, the A34tt-5000000 series, even though uncertainties remain over how British Aerospace will fund its share of the programme.

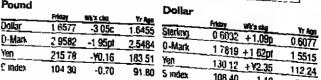

BAc, which holds a 20 per cent stake in Airbus, has applied for £120m in launch aid from the Government for the new jet but has so far been refused. Airbus has already received more than Bittorders and commitments for the A340-500/6001

MAIN PRICE CHANGES

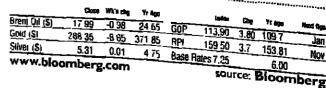

CURRENCIES

OTHER INDICATORS

GAVYN DAVIES ON FEARS OF A NEW STRAIN OF ASIAN FLU

Why the world should worry about China

With mayhem persisting throughout Asian financial markets. China is increasingly becoming the focus of investors' attention. In one sense, the reason is obvious - sheer size. You just cannot ignore an economy with 1.2 hillion people sprinkled around a land mass of 10 million square kilometres. More importantly, when measured at purchasing power parity (PPP). China's GDP has a weight of around 12 per cent so worried about what is going on in an in the global economy. With the Chinese economy growing at 9 per cent per annum. this alone contributes a full percentage point to global GDP growth each year.

However, China is still a very closed economy, so much of its GDP simply reflects internal husiness which has no meaningful effect on the outside world. As someone once said, who cares how many pigs are slaughtered in Sichuan province except the pigs? In fact, when measured at actual exchange rates, China accounts for only 3 per cent of the world economy, which is about half the size of France.

The difference between actual and PPP exchange rates is explained by the fact that prices in the sheltered service sectors of the Chinese economy are very low relative to world standards. For example, a haircut in provincial China may be only 1 per cent of the cost of a haircut in Paris when translated into dollars at today's exchange rates, but it may be worth just as much to the recipient in real (or PPP) terms. Thus GDP in China measured at PPP exchange rates greatly increases the valuation of haircuts and other items in the domestic sector, and this makes the economy look much higger relative to the rest of the world.

cent of world trade, and for much, much less of the "investible universe" of financial instruments. This suggests that the importance of China to investors is probably better reflected in its 3 per cent share of nominal world GDP, rather than its 12 per cent weight in world GDP when measured at PPP exchange rates. Why then are we economy only half as hig as France?

The answer is that in several respects China is pivotal to other developments in the world. First, China accounts for 20 per cent of world grain consumption. 10 per cent of metal use, and 5 per cent of world energy use. A recession in China would therefore have hig implications for global commodity prices and hond markets.

Second, the behaviour of the Chinese economy is crucial for Hong Kong, and therefore for the Hong Kong dollar's pegagainst the US dollar. Hong Kong is China's largest trading partner, taking around one quarter of its exports this year. If China slumped into a recession, leading to a devaluation of the renminhi (RMB), these links with Hong Kong would almost certainly be enough to put China actually accounts for only 4 per mies is fairly minimal. But serious contagion effects may come in the area of trade competition with Japan (which takes 17 per cent of Chinese exports I.

In addition, there would be severe contagion effects on other emerging economics - notably Argentina, which has a currency board system that would suffer a huge speculative attack if the similar system in Hong Kong failed. This would in turn no doubt kill off the brave attempts of the Cardoso government to defend the Brazilian real. There would therefore be serious negative effects on the US economy, both via these Latin American impacts, and via additional exports from China into the US, which is its largest eastomer outside Asia.

In view of the importance of all these contagion effects, it is scarcely surprising that the US authorities are so worried about the possibility of a Chinese recession, along with a consequent devaluation of the currency. Fortunately, this is not the most likely out-turn for several reasons.

China: effective exchange rate

International Phone Calls

Asia prior to the currency crisis, equilibrium exchange rate models suggest that the RMB may actually be slightly undervalued. It is true that the RMB has been dragged up alongside the rising dollar against the smaller Asian currencies, and that it has now lost all of the competitive edge it gained following the 1994 devaluation. 10n Goldman Sachs' calculaback to where is was in 1993 - see graph.) However, exports are still growing at annual rates of over 20 per cent, and foreign exchange reserves have continued to increase, suggesting that the problem remains one of excess capital inflows, rather than the reverse. There has been a cumulative trade surplus of $35bn so far this year, with a further $24bn coming from inflows of foreign direct investment.

On the surface, at least, this situation looks totally different from that which afflicted the rest of Asia prior to this year's currency crisis. In addition, the position of the Chinese economic cycle seems different from the rest of Asia. Essentially, the economy has been slowing for about four years under a tight domestic policy squeeze, and inflation has dropped to zero. There is consequently scope for policy to be eased.

Interest rates have already heen cut by 3-3.5 per cent in the past few weeks, and the public finances appear to be in reasonable shape following three

First, unlike the situation in the rest of years of fiscal tightening. An increase in public investment can now be afforded, and looks likely over the next 12 months. Assuming demand policy is eased in this way, overall GDP growth can prohably be maintained at about 9 per cent next year, despite a worsening in net trade.

What about the health of the financial system? A great deal of gloom has been expressed on this subject by western investors. However, it should not be fortions, the real effective exchange rate is gotten that the problem in China's publicly owned hanks is mainly one of bad loans to state-owned enterprises. Since the government will pick up the responsibility for these losses, the weakness in the Chinese financial system is akin to that in the former Soviet Union - ie it is a problem of allocation of losses within the public sector. This could still prove serious, but it should not undermine the economy in the same way as has occurred elsewhere in Asia. China's low ratio of foreign debt to GDP, at only around 14 per cent, should also offer protection from the worst risks of currency contagion.

> Despite all this, it must be admitted that the anecdotal evidence from industrial companies doing husiness in China is much hleaker than the official data are suggesting, and international government officials seem increasingly worried about the situation. In view of the opaque nature of the Chinese economic statistics, the view of many private sector economists based on these rosy official statistics - may turn out to he too optimistic. If so, the emerging market debacle would suddenly look much more serious for the rest of us.

Depreciation intolerable pressure on the peg. Third, if the HK peg were to break, there would be severe contagion effects in other emerging markets, For once, the knock-on effects to the rest of Asia may not be the most critical factors, since direct trade between China and other developing Asian coono-

TEL: 0171 293 2222

~ 4

BUSINESS TO BUSINESS

One cloudy day...

_1'11 show to 70% with super low rates

Services

COMPANY

管 FREE LTD

Mer and specialists on proceedings

прив этоку.

and Registered Cate of How I wish I could phone my friends and family

more of ten, but it's just too expensive.

FAX: 0171 293 2505

Equipment & Supplies Equipment & Supplies THE VERY FIRST TOSHIBA AUTHORISED NOTEBOOK SUPPLIER Super powered deals on TOSHIBA Notebooks and free Letus SmartSuite 97 from Gultronics! from 1985 ∞ To Value ∞ To Guitronies ∞ Toshiba SATELLITE PRO 440CDX/CDT SATELLITE 230CX SATELLITE 220CS

SATELLITE PRO 460CDX/CDT SAN RELLET IE PRO * SOM BOO Rom *
2.17GB Hard did. * 12.1" HCA/TET colour * Seepable (die CD-Rom * Backer licht sowd ein all Serron speleres * 2. 2018 PCP-CA sloss
* bafra-red *Weigfs, 3.25g * 3 Year in 1. Warranty

TECRA 520CDT/530CDT swapelin 10x CD-Ross - 16-bit sound, a Survey spatiages - 2x 32bit PCHCIA - tain - Weight 29kg - 3 fear incl. Warrans

3.6 PCPCIA 0171 436 3131 0171 323 4612 Full Warrenty

Mobile Phones

TECRA 740CDT - Intel P166/90 PPO - 16PE EDO Rom - 3G8 Hard disk - 133 H-res FFT - Scapable Illar CD-Rom • CM(33.6) dansfar medjemis-bit sound nic & Senno spelarer - 2x 20cr PCPCIA -lain-red - Weiglet 3.9g - 3 New Int'l Winnamy HOTLINES

PORTEGE 300CT

We will beat any genuine advertised price from any Toshiba authorised dealer.

LIBRETTO SOCT • Intel P79/Nz = 16/18 BOO Rom • 810/16 Hard dat • 61° TFT colour • Built-in Squad system with speakers • 1 POSICA dat • Integrand Housefront • Infra-red • Weight 850g • Win 95/L11 • 11kgr International Warranz

TECRA 750CDT

GULTRONICS

AMAZING VALUE! Country 52.10 International 41.50 Savers Cards 52.90 To tase your saver card, samply $2,78 43p 90p 09.53 £1.58  Orange Enter your pin number when promoted. $2.80 3) Dial the destinution 4) To make a follow-on-call press the s key 3 times. FERRONAL MALLES FREE WOY For Telco's 30 day Billing Account phone 0181 289 ideal for the tourist travelling businessman, and student. Keep in touch with relatives, friends and business 5776. Fax: 0181 249 5664 For Telco's Business Agency Opportunities phone 01656 880 740. world Use from any Fax 01656 880 880 home, in the office, in a For Telco's Savers Card Or Credit Card Fax Orderline using a mobile.

> phone 0181 289 5776 ffeethe date 18th Augus AM GOLDSMITH 007 Prices subject to NDEPENDENT CONSULTANT TELCO GLOBAL cleange and are fully nclusive of VAT BT par phone prices correct as altime of going to press

The forest Card is available

ed on the reverse of each

VAT negotiation. Bank account available on some day. Daguing accounting and the service applies much more FREEPHONE 0500 30 30 65 Regents Group like a job for Worldeall Woman What's more - Worldcall's AMAZING SAVINGS apply

The adventures of ... WORLDCALL WOMAN

House! This looks

International Phone Calls

24 hours a day, so you'll be free to call whenever you want. worth of Calls can be made from any tone phone without making

A few examples	BT	Worldcall	%Saving
UK National/Regional	8p	6р	25%
USA	£0.24	10p	58%
Japan	£0.77	23p	70%
South Korea	£1.08	48p	55%
Germany	£0.28	14p	50%
Australia	£0.49	20p	59%
India	£1.20	60p	50%
Egypt	£1.26	67p	47%
U.A.E.	£1.02	55p	46%
Ni eria	£1.05	69	38%
Russia	£0.80	47p	41%
Pe	er minute – I	ncluding VAT

Werldcall

Watch out for Worldcall Woman's tireless charity work in the forthcoming adventures

* CB Free calls offer applies to new customers paying a set pre-payment. BT Rates a Standard Daytime. All figures rounded to the nearest whole number

Business for Sale

Opportunities

Per Second Charging Clear Lines • Quality Service

For details call freephone

800 634 0000

SALES DISTRIBUTION TELECOMMUNICATIONS £200-£1000 this Month 100% Profis on Capital Every Year No Selling, No Risk Can easily to rion alongside any other humbers or job c20,000 MINISTRAL REQUIRED Would you like to earn F50K any changes.

OPPORTUNITY Launched In October plus a year ?... We work from 1997. Repeating and our homes Full & P/Time. More new products being Introduced in early 1998 Call 01426-914-753 NOW Call 0121 565 5494

NOTICE TO READERS Whilst we take reasonable previousions with all strongly advised to take professional advice before you too!...for free info pack

Don't forget to mention 🗽 The Independent: when replying 👙 to adverts

Telephone:

0181-236-4906.

Franchises

eall () box THE TELEPHONE FRANCHISE

Buy a franchise that is virtually guaranteed - the telephol market is opening up world-wide and discounted international and national calls are very big business. Call Box is a major player in this market. We have a growing number of Call Box Centres that are currently operating under management and ready to be taken ove on a going concern basis. This offers franchisees a major opportunity to buy a business which is already operating. you can see it and see what it is doing. We are looking for highly motivated and enthusiastic people who will maximise the potential in running a Call Box franchise with all its ancillary pervices, the to is in the region of £100k with funding up to 50% for Call the Franchise Department or 07000 780355 for Information Pack

CHANGES

the second of the

TES

4 FREEPHONE

William .

To advertise in the Business to Business section please call Simon DeBono on 0171 293 2742.

08000 263677

For an instant price quote to over 250 countries

paying a depusit or entering the buy financial commitmen partmen

to an EU

cess for decision drug) ap crucial to and now

Car

Flower evidence links Turin Shroud to the Holy Land

The Turin Shroud, which devotees believe was wound around the crucified body of Jesus two millennia ago, began its travels in Jerusalem, according to a new study.

Eric Silver follows the latest twist on the detective trail.

Avinoam Danin's investigation of photo images and pollen grains taken from the ancient, discoloured linen pinpoints the holy city and the Judean wilderness to its east as the place where wild flowers garlanding the shadowy head of Christ were picked.

Holy relic: The image taken from the Shroud could only have come from the vicinity of Jerusalem," the 58-year-old Hebrew University professor told The Independent yesterday. "And they were fresh when they were placed in the shroud."

If this is so, it undermines two sceptical theories published in the past year: that a medieval male model was joining leaf to stem indidaubed with red paint of a kind cates that the plant was commonly used in Italy, then picked in spring," he wrote. wrapped in the sheet to create the image of a crucified corpse; or that it was the shroud of Jacques de Molay, shroud," he said, "was picked last grand master of the at about 20m in the Judean Knights Templar, who was crucified in 1307 in a parody of his faith by the Paris inquiorder's wealth and power. Last April, the shroud was it had been housed in reverent disputation for four centuries. The linen measures 4ft 5ins by 4ft 8ins. It is printand back images of a longhaired man, just under 6ft tall, who had been nailed by the hands and feet, scourged as described in the New Testament account of the execution of Jesus. There are even signs of head wounds that could have been inflicted by a crown of thoms.

Pollen grains and traces of plants, especially around the head, were discovered by Max Frei, a Swiss forensic scientist, who examined the shroud in 1973 and 1978. He identified 25 species among the hundreds of pollen grains he had taken from the linen, but died in 1982 before completing his research.

Three years later, Alan Whanger, a retired American doctor and photography buff, identified 28 species native to the Holy Land after enhancing faint images on a 1931 photograph of the shroud. They included rock roses, crown chrysanthemums and a bouquet of bean capers. Dr Whanger called in Professor Danin, an expert on the otany of the Near East, and hey cross-checked their information.

Writing in the latest issue of the Israeli geographical magazine, Eretz, Professor Danin reported that a bouquet of rock roses seen in the enhanced photographs on the right cheek of the human figure coincided with pollen found by Max Frei long before anyone had discovered images of the plant on the shroud.

Using a database of plant distribution, the Israeli scholar located 27 of the shroud's 28 species in the Jerusalem area. But the modest bean caper (zygophyllum dumosum), noted by both Mr Frei and Dr Whanger, was the clincher.

The bean caper grows only in Israel, Jordan and the Sinai desert. Professor Danin can even tell when it was picked. The fact that the images of winter leaves appear on the shroud together with the previous year's petioles [a stalk

In conversation, the professor goes further. "Another kind of caper found on the wilderness. In spring this caper starts to open at 12 noon and continues growing until 5pm. If you cut it, it stays sition, jealous of the crusading frozen in the same form."

QED. But what the Danin saved from a fire which rav- study cannot do is date the aged Turin Cathedral, where shroud. Carbon testing of the linen in 1988 suggested that it was made in the 13th or 14th century, but this is challenged by the Archhishop of Turin ed with the bloodstained front and other shroud advocates, who argue that the chemistry might have been changed by an earlier fire in 1532, or that the specimens examined were and stabbed in the side, exactly parts of a repair job. The debate continues.

Old friends: England and Italy, painted in 1859 by the Pre-Raphaelite artist Jane Benham Hay, and removed from public view for political reasons

Uncovered: a fine Victorian painting by a woman (why weren't there more of them?)

A chance inquiry has led to the rediscovery of a major work of art which was last exhibited at the Royal Academy almost 150 years ago. Esther Leach reports.

The sought-after early Pre-Raphaelite painting, England and Italy, by Jane Benham Hay, is on show for the first time since 1859 at Manchester City Art Gallery.

The painting was uncovered after a request for information about the artist was made to Dr Jan Marsh, an expert in Pre-Raphaelite women artists, from a Boston art dealer.

The dealer had been offered the painting for sale by the Boston owners and was seeking more information. The couple, who had been unaware of its importance, have loaned it to Manchester for an exhibition on

Pre-Raphaelite women artists. The painting shows two young boys against a Mediterranean background: one an Italian street urchin and the othDr Marsh said the work is of historical importance to the history of women and painting: it had disappeared from public litically controversial at the insociety. time because of its subject. Just at that moment italy had dependent of Austria. The painting reflects support among the English for Italy," said Dr Marsh "The painting shows some signs of ageing but it's otherwise in excellent condition. The find is very exciting. We imagine the painting has been in private ownership all this time and we hope more of her work will emerge."

Jane Benham Hay's greatest success was in 1867 with The Florentine Procession, known as the Burning of the Vanities, exhibited at the French Gallery in

The artist was part of an "Art Sisterhood" of Pre-Raphaelites that lasted from 1850 to 1900. Together with other women artists she fought to break down social barriers and prejudices er a well-dressed English boy, which prevented them exhibit-though women had not been women were beginning to surge pre-eminent in the art world. Dr Marsh said the Pre-Raphaelites had attracted them because view many years ago. "It was po- a time of feminine emancipation dependent and emancipated artist, and their child, to run ahead in many different fields."

Dr Marsh said there was more to learn about Benham know when she died, although we believe it was abroad.

"She left her hushand William Hay, said to have been the movement had occurred at. Hav, said to have been an in- a rather middle-of-the-road woman. "... we know she was away to Italy where she lived Everyone was talking about boro in 1829, daughter of an with an artist called Francesco artists, Pamela Gerrish Nuna.

ing and selling their work. Al- the Woman Question and ironmonger ... but we don't Altamura and had more chil dren. But really much of this is mination really essary?

> The exhibition at Manchester exhibits the work of 21 artists, and was brought together by Dr Marsh and a leading expert in Victorian women

Bond: He diast forever

> Dataholic caught in the Web

#of breakthrough oto climate talks

SIEMENS

Remember, somewhere out there is a pair of argyll socks with your name on them. This Christmas, get to Santa before he gets to you. Ask for the new Siemens S18, which has just been voted the Best Business Mobile in the World by Connect magazine and which comes with 10 hours talktime, the world's first colour display and a voice memo function. Better

CPutrished by Newspaper Publishing PLC, I Canada Square, Canary Wharf, Lordon E14 5DL and printed at Mirror Colour Print, St. Albans Read, Walford

Back comes available from F

حكان الاعل